"During my life at the West, I lived two miles from Cincinnati, in the country; and domestic service, not always to be found in the city, is next to impossible to be obtained in the country, even by those who are willing to give the highest wages. So what was to be expected for poor me, who had very little of this world's good to offer? Had it not been for my inseparable friend Anna, a noble-hearted English girl, who landed on our American shores in destitution and sorrow, and who clave unto me as Ruth unto Naomi, I had never lived through all the toil which this uncertainty and absolute want of domestic service imposed upon me. You may imagine, therefore, how glad I was when about a dozen families of liberated negroes came and settled in our vicinity. They became my favourite resorts in cases of emergency.

"If anybody wants to have a black face look handsome, let them be left as I have been—in feeble health, in oppressive hot weather, with a sick baby in arms, and two or three other little ones in the nursery, and not a single servant in the whole house to do a single turn. And then, if they should see any good Aunt Frankie coming in, with her honest, bluff, black face, her long, strong arms, her chest as big and stout as a barrel, and her hilarious, hearty laugh—perfectly delighted to take one's washing and do it at a fair price—they would appreciate the beauty of black people.

"My cook, poor Eliza, was a regular epitome of slave life in herself; fat, easy, gentle, loving and loveable; always calling my modest house 'The Palace,' as if it had been a plantation with 700 hands on it. Her way of arranging the kitchen was at first like Dinah's, though she imbibed our ideas more rapidly, and seemed more ready to listen to my suggestions than did that dignitary. She had lived through the whole sad story of a Virginian-raised slave's life. She must have been, in her youth, a very handsome mulatto girl. Her voice was sweet, her manners refined and agreeable. She was raised in a good family, as nurse and seamstress.

"When the family became embarrassed, she was suddenly sold to be sent to a plantation in Louisiana. She has often told me how, without any warning, she was forced into a carriage, and saw her little mistress screaming and stretching her arms from the window towards her as she was driven away. She has told me of scenes on the Louisiana plantations, and how she has often been out in the night by stealth, ministering to poor slaves who have been mangled or lacerated by the whip. From Louisiana she was sold into Kentucky, and her last master was the father of all her children. On this point she always maintained a delicacy and reserve which, though it is not at all uncommon among slave women, appears to me remarkable.

"She always called her master her husband, and spoke of him with the same apparent feeling with which any woman regards her husband; and it was not till after she had lived with me some years that I discovered accidentally the real nature of the relation. I shall never forget how sorry I felt for her, nor my feelings at her humble apology—'You know, Mrs. Stowe, slave women can't help themselves.' She had two very pretty quadroon daughters, with beautiful hair and eyes—interesting children, whom I had instructed in the family school with my children.

"Time would fail to tell you all I have learned incidentally of the slave system, in the history of various slaves who came into my family, and of the workings of the underground railroad, which I may say runs through my barn."

Abolition Lecture in a Slave State.

WILMINGTON, May 19.

The Rev. Theodore Parker delivered an address to a large audience here last night, in Odd Fellow's Hall. His subject was slavery. This was the first appearance of this "champion of freedom" in a slave State, and his discourse was listened to with the closest attention. The lecture was greeted with frequent and hearty applause.

PRACTICAL PHILANTROPY.—W. H. Goodwin, a citizen of Richmond, and a native of Virginia, has been stopping at the Michigan Exchange, during the past week, and left there last evening for home. He brought with him four slaves, two of whom are children, their mother, who is married to a free colored man, and their grandmother, who was his own nurse in infancy. He gave them their liberty, and that was not all: he bought a house and lot on Macomb Street, which he deeded to the old woman, and left one hundred dollars to their credit in the bank. We have no doubt he went home happier than though he had recaptured so many human beings, to carry them back to slavery.

LIQUOR LAW IN DELAWARE.—The Maine Liquor Law went into effect in Delaware on the 3rd inst. An increase in the price of boarding at the hotels went into operation at the same time. A general storing away of liquor was observable for several days previous.

☞ Joseph Hiss, the offending member of the Massachusetts Legislature, in the recent investigations, has been finally expelled from the House, by a vote of 136 yeas to 15 nays.

EMIGRATION.—The emigration exodus has again set in from Ireland; but this year the grand rush is said to be in the direction of the Canadas. Your "Know Nothing" people, whether or not they may exactly mean it I will not say, are at any rate firm friends of the British Provinces. I fancy it will be a long time ere the Canadians repudiate foreigners settling among them; and what with the agitation against the masses emigrating to the United States, now commenced in Ireland by the Roman Catholic priests, will of course have its influence in that direction likewise.

☞ The Irish Catholics in the United States are returning in large numbers to their native land. The American Celt says that the return emigration from the port of New York alone, proceeds at the rate of 500 per week. Since the first of January the departures are said almost to balance the arrivals.

CHILD SCALDED TO DEATH BY A CUP OF TEA.—A little daughter of Mr. Atkinson, printer, on Fifth street, came to its death last Tuesday, from the effects of being scalded by a cup of tea, which was accidentally spilled in its bosom.—Louisville Courier.

☞ The Catholic Church of St. Mary's was broken into one night last week and a number of church vessels and ornaments were destroyed and scattered in the streets. The magistrates have offered a reward of $100 for the apprehension of the offenders.

☞ On Friday afternoon last, a deliberate murder was committed at East Flamboro', near Hamilton. Mr. W. R. Bradwell, a foreman on a portion of the Hamilton and Toronto Railway, was attacked by James O'Donnell and John Mulligan, and was, apparently, without the slightest provocation, so severely beaten, that he died shortly after. A verdict of wilful murder was found against the parties by the coroner's jury.

☞ A respectable farmer of Pelham township, named Elijah Phelps, hung himself from a ladder, in his barn, on Wednesday.

Extraordinary Premiums to Agents!

For procuring Subscribers for

TICKETS AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,

IN PERHAM'S GREAT

100,000 GIFT ENTERPRISE!

The distribution of the Gifts being definitely fixed for JULY 5, 1855.

Any person sending $10 may deduct 10 per cent. or will receive 11 Tickets.

Each person sending $100 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Mammoth Gold Pen and Case, valued at $10.

Each person sending $200 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Silver Watch, valued at $25.

Each person sending $300 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Gold Watch, valued at $50.

The person who shall send, before the 5th of July, the largest amount above $500, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Piano, valued at $200.

I have been induced to make the above liberal offers in order to remove a settled objection in the minds of your committee, to having the distribution take place while there remain in my hands tickets unsold, and for which cause they seem fit to defer the partition of the gifts, which was fixed for the 27th inst., to the 5th of July, as will be seen by reference to their proceedings, published below. I assure you that the postponement is as vexatious to me as it is to those who have purchased tickets. I therefore hope that each and every one now interested, will co-operate with me in the effort to dispose of the few thousand tickets remaining unsold, and thus advance the interests of the whole body of shareholders.

Respectfully yours,

J. PERHAM.

TO THE PATRONS OF

Perham's Third Gift Enterprise.

At a meeting of the Committee of Shareholders of Perham's Gift Enterprise, held at the Academy Hall, Broadway, on Wednesday Evening, April 18th, 1855, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted and ordered to be printed:—

Whereas, in view of the fact that several enterprises have been started and carried on with a seeming positive purpose of defrauding those who could be persuaded to purchase tickets therein; and such fraudulent proceedings have exerted an injurious influence in the sale of tickets in the enterprise of Mr. Perham; and whereas, it is deemed essential that all the tickets should be disposed of before the distribution takes place, be it therefore

Resolved, That in order to allow time for that purpose, the distribution be postponed until the 5th of July, at such place as may hereafter be determined on.

Resolved, That the committee have undiminished confidence in the integrity of Mr. Perham, and in his disposition to conform to all his published promises to his patrons.

ROBT. BEATTY, JR,
Chairman.

REMEMBER!

The Tickets are only $1 Each,

And each Ticket admits Four Persons to

Perham's Burlesque Opera, 663 Broadway, New York,

And that among the Gifts to be distributed, are:

☞ All orders for Tickets, by mail, and all letters for information, should be addressed to

JOSIAH PERHAM,
663, Broadway, New York.

☞ Orders will now be received for Tickets in Perham's Fourth Gift Enterprise.

PERHAM'S GIFT ENTERPRISE.

The committee appointed by the Shareholders in this affair, to distribute the 100,000 Gifts amongst the ticket holders, have deferred the distribution until the 5th of July, on account of there remaining unsold some few thousands of tickets. Mr. Perham, ever anxious to meet the views of his patrons, offers extraordinary inducements to Agents to engage in the sale of the remaining tickets, so that there may be no mere delays, which are unquestionably as vexatious to him as to those who have purchased tickets in his enterprise. We commend the reading of his advertisement to our patrons, and hope that each and all will lend a helping hand to bring the matter to an early and satisfactory consummation.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings.

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the greography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everythnig is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures, and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigaton; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one impeial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,

in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchae of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an emiment French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the pupile, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid,)

J. N. STILL,
11 Brooklyn, L. I.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The "Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

REMARKS.

Goods to be entered at the fair market value, in the principal Markets of the Country, from whence they are imported directly into this Province; but the Governor, by a Departmental Order, may permit Goods bona fide imported from one country through another, into the Province, to be valued for Duty as if imported direct.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.
By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR.)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

SIR,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,
R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.
The Collector of Customs.

16TH VIC. CAP. 85. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. All packages, containing Soap, Candles, Pipes, Nails, Chains, Paints, Spices, Nuts, Vermiceli, Macaroni, Glass Tin, Canada Plates, Tins, Trunks and Jars containing Merchandise, and all other packages in which the goods are usually exposed for sale, or which necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold. And that the following Packages are to be exempt from payment of Duty, viz: Bales, Trusses, Cases covering Casks of Wines or Brandy in Wood, Cases and Casks containing Dry Goods, Hardware or Cutlery, Crates and Casks containing Glassware and Earthenware, Cases containing Bottled Wine or Bottled Spirits, and all other packages in which the goods are not usually exposed for sale, or which do not necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold.

By Command,
F. HINCKS, Inspector Gen.

IV. And be it enacted, That spirits and strong waters having the flavour of any kind of spirits or strong waters subject to higher duty than that imposed on Whiskey, shall be liable to the duty, imposed on the kind of spirits or strong waters of which they have the flavor as aforesaid, from whatever substance they may be distilled or prepared; but nothing in this Section shall be constructed as a declaration that spirits and Strong waters so flavored, were or were not before the passing of this Act subject to the duty imposed on those of which they have the flavor.

OPEN TO THE WORLD!

BUT MORE ESPECIALLY TO THE INHABITANTS OF BRANTFORD,
And the surrounding Country,

A Scientific Museum and Reading Room

WHERE all the lovers of human progress and perfection may investigate and apply the sciences of PHYSIOLOGY and PHRENOLOGY in harmony with all other sciences, so as to obtain a correct knowledge of themselves and the laws that govern them, and the universe as ordained by our Creator.

In the Museum there will be Casts, Masks, and Engravings of great and noted characters of various parts of the world, such as Sir Walter Scott, Napolean Bonaparte, Emmett, the great Poet, and a great many others too numerous to mention, which can be seen in the Museum.

ADMISSION FREE.

Rooms over Mr. JOHN H. MOORE'S Store "Emporium," Second Story, Colborne Street,—entrance on Market Street outside, up first flight of stairs, where Mr. PERSONS will make examinations in the above Sciences, give instructions as to the Laws of Life and Health, point out talents, their various kind and degrees, and how to apply them to the best advantage, in whatever Trade, Business or Profession you may be engaged in, and also for what you are best adapted to pursue most successfully in any of the various occupations in life.

CHARTS

Will be given with the greatest care and accuracy, both written and printed, or either. Printed Charts, containing the whole Science of Physiology, Phrenology, and Physiognomy, highly and beautifully illustarted with one hundred engravings, giving and explaining the two extremes of development, large and small, in a scale ranging from one to twenty-one degrees, which enable the individual to read character at first observation, in any attitude, place, or position, including rules for finding the Phrenological organs, and directions for making examinations. Price five shillings, currency, including examination.

Ordinary Printed Charts,	- - -	£0 2 6	c'y.
Average written description,	- - -	0 5 0	"
Large written description	- - -	0 10 0	"
Largest and most useful description, giving a complete directory guide, in detail, in every department of your nature that this age will admit of or demands,	-	1 0 0	"

These descriptions will be written in clear and plain style, and quite practical.

Small written descriptions, or outlines of character may be given for 2s. 6d; children under 12, half price; under 2 years gratis.

Perfect satisfaction will be given in every particular, or no pay required.

Applications will be gratefully received for visiting Families or Parties at their own residences, in any part of this town.

Orders will be received for any of Fowlers & Wells' publications, wholesale or retail, and promptly attended to.

I consider written descriptions of inestimable value, for which reason I have given this department a more thorough investigation.

Orphans, Widows, and the Poor, will receive verbal examination free of charge.

Hours of attendance from 9 o'clock, a.m., until 10 o'clock, p.m.

WILLIAM PERSONS.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

JOHN ALEXANDER.
Brantford, December 26, 1854.

BUFFALO, Feb. 21st 1853.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

THE Universal Phonographer,

ORGAN OF THE
American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,
Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonotypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a Journal of THIRTY-TWO pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing, Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic Intelligence, Notices to Correspondents, Important Items of News, Biographies of Phonographers, "Gems of Expression," "Glances," Sketches, Eloquent Extracts, etc., etc., in four different methods of representing our language; Romanic Print, Phonetic Print, Phonetic Long hand, and Phonetic Short-hand (in both of its styles). And all for ONE DOLLAR. Subscriptions should be prepaid and addressed thus: "ANDREW J. GRAHAM, Phonetic Depot, 338, Bleecker Street, New York."

☞ Any person desiring to become practically acquainted with the different departments of the Writing and Printing Reform, cannot better attain his or her wish than by sending the publisher $1 50 (the fifty cents in stamps), for which there will be furnished the necessary instruction book (pre-paid), and the Universal Phonographer for one year.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,
DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and the amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The subscriber will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural & Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries, and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the Magazine, and such as get up Clubs of subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another on account of the complexional character, stars and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity as citizens, 1st. To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of the approach of any sinister designs, misrepresentations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as a subject of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

Information Wanted

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. If she will call on or communicate by letter with Robert Phillips, Centre St., Toronto, she will hear news of much importance relating to her property.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - - per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper,
Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

GOOD BOOKS BY MAIL!

PUBLISHED BY FOWLERS AND WELLS,
308, Broadway, New York.

In order to accommodate "The People" residing in all parts of the United States, the Publishers will forward, by return of the First Mail, any book named in the following list. The postage will be prepaid by them at the New York Office. By this arrangement of prepaying postage in advance, fifty per cent. is saved to the purchaser. All letters containing orders should be post-paid, and directed as follows:—

Poetry.

The World would be the better for it.

If men cared less for wealth and fame,
And less for battle-fields and glory;
If writ in human hearts, a name
Seemed better than in song and story;
If men, instead of nursing pride,
Would learn to hate it and abhor it—
If more relied
On Love to guide,
The world would be the better for it.

If men dealt less in stocks and lands,
And more in bonds and deeds fraternal;
If Love's work had more willing hands
To link this world to the supernal;
If men stored up Love's oil and wine,
And on bruised human hearts would pour it;
If "yours" and "mine"
Would once combine,
The world would be the better for it.

If more would act the play of Life,
And fewer spoil it in rehearsal;
If Bigotry would sheathe its knife
Till Good became more universal;
If Custom, gray with ages grown,
Had fewer blind men to adore it—
If talent shone
In Truth alone,
The world would be the better for it.

If men were wise in little things—
Affecting less in all their dealings—
If hearts had fewer rusted strings
To isolate their kindly feelings;
If men, when Wrong beats down the Right,
Would strike together and restore it—
If Right made Might
In every fight,
The world would be the better for it.

NEXT DOOR.

Let other people brag about
The pleasant folks they meet;
I only wish they'd come and live
A week in our street;
They never should have caught me there,
Had I but known before,
That neighbours could have proved so bad,
As our 'next door.'

They've seven children—ugly brats
As ever saw the light—
Who shout and bawl, and shriek and squall,
From morning until night.
'Tis true their parents flog them: well,
That makes them louder roar;
I wish old maids or bachelors,
Were our 'next door.'

Then so familiar, too, they've grown;
It is extremely odd,
To see nine people on the watch
To courtsy, bow, and nod!
Now eighteen eyes become, in time,
A sort of stare-case bore:
I really wish they'd look at home,
At our 'next door.'

My greenhouse seems a favored mark,
For brickbats to be thrown;
My fruit and flowers within their reach
They gather as their own.
My peaches, grapes, and nectarines,
By which I set such store,
Have all been eaten by the grubs
At our 'next door.'

They keep a cockatoo that screams,
A horrid dog that howls;
Three cats that scratch my flowers up,
Besides some nasty fowls,
That flying visits often pay,
And pick my garden o'er;
I keep the hens, they keep the eggs,
At our 'next door.'

My neighbours pay no tradesmen's bills,
For taxes have no cares;
Last week I had the water stopp'd
By some mistake, for theirs.
Such goings on, and goings off,
I'll not submit to more;
Another house I'll seek, detach'd,
With no 'next door.'

—Punch.

Miscellaneous.

A Child's Definition of a Cigar.—Dr. Tyng, the pastor of St. George's Episcopal Church, preached to the Sabbath school children last Sunday. Speaking of what St. Paul's friend Timothy did not do, the Dr. said "he smoked no segars." "Do you know," continued the reverend gentleman, "what a cigar is?" "Yeth, siree" shouted a moral specimen of Young America, "its the tip end of the devil's tail." It is reported, and currently believed, that the pastor sniggered.

Bees and Fruit Trees.—A writer in a literary journal of Paris, states that the bees greatly improved the fructification of fruit trees. Orchards in which several hives are kept, always produce more fruit than those in which there are none. In the Provinces on the Rhine, the fruits are more abundant and fine than in any part of Germany, and there it is the custom to keep large quantities of bees. Plants, too, which bees visit, thrive better than others.—Free Democrat.

☞ A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says that corn planted in ground ploughed only four inches deep, yielded 75 bushels to the acre, while that planted in ground ploughed eight inches deep, yielded but 50 bushels. The writer says a neighbor of his, who had sub-soiled one portion of his corn land and ploughed the other only five inches deep, realized 60 bushels from the former, while from that planted in thinly ploughed ground he got 75 bushels.

Indian Muffins.—A pint and a half of yellow Indian meal sifted. A handful of wheat flour. A quarter of a pound of fresh butter. A quart of milk. Four eggs. A very small tea cup full of milk. Put the milk into a saucepan. Cut the butter into it. Set it over the fire, and warm it until the butter is very soft, but not until it melts. Then take it off; stir it well till all is mixed; and set away to cool. Beat four eggs very light; and when the milk is cold, stir them into it alternately with the meal, a little at a time of each. Add the salt. Beat the whole very hard after it is all mixed. Then butter some muffin-rings on the inside. Set them in a hot oven, or on a heated griddle; pour some of the batter into each; and bake the muffins well. Send them hot to table, continuing to bake while a fresh supply is wanted. Pull them open with your fingers, and eat them with butter, to which you may add molasses or honey.—Farm Journal.

Best Bread.—The best bread is that made of unbolted wheat flour. In some cases a small portion of white bread may be desirable, but the brown after a short time, will be found more palatable, and conducive to a more regular and healthy condition of the system. It has been ascertained that even dogs cannot live over fifty days fed upon fine flour bread and water; when fed upon such as contained the whole or a large portion of the bran, they are found in no respect to suffer.—Water-Cure Journal.

Dyspepsia.—Bran, simply dry bran, taken at the rate of a couple of table spoonfuls a day, is said to be a sovereign remedy for dyspepsia, in cases where the disease is not owing to any organic derangement. It is easily tried, and perfectly harmless, to say the least. Try it—especially ye who have been living too much on fine white flour.

A Cure for Felons.—Within the past year we have known the spinal marrow of an ox or cow applied by three different persons, with the most satisfactory results, in relieving the pain and securing a speedy cure of their felons. This, we are confident, will be very useful information to many persons. The spinal marrow should be applied fresh every four hours for two days. —Scientific American.

A New Anæsthetic—Ice and Salt.—Dr. E. H. Dixon, of New York, states that we possess a new and harmless anæsthetic, adapted to almost every operation, serious or otherwise. It consists of ice and salt, in the proportion of two parts of the former to one of the latter, finely pounded and applied, in a fine gauze bag, from four to five minutes, directly to the skin where the incision is to be made. The operations of amputating the entire breast, applying caustic, &c., have been preformed, by means of this agent, without the slightest pain.—Saturday Evening Post.

The Spalax.—The Spalax, or blind rat' is found in Persia. It was once thought to be the same as the mole, and to be blind, as no external traces of eyes are to be seen; but these organs, of the thickness of half a line, have been discovered on removing the skin, and found also to be perfectly developed. The Spalax depends upon its ears for warning, and carries its head high for that purpose, its sense of hearing being acute, and the auditory canal of great size. Those animals live in communities beneath the surface of the earth, boring upward for roots and making one hole far deeper than the other, which is their city refuge. The agriculturist often suffers from their researches, as they prefer cultivated land for their underground abodes. They can run sidewise or backward, with great swiftness. Their bite is very severe.

Good Pluck—A Genuine John Bull.

The Lyons (France) papers are full of the following singular story:—

On the 19th ult., a number of Englishmen, established in that city, gave a splendid banquet to a countrymen of theirs, a Mr. Arthur Fleming; a rich merchant of London, then at Lyons, who has just completed a residence of eleven months in the prison of Frankfort, Germany, in which he had been placed under the following circumstances:—About a twelvemonth ago, Mr. Fleming stopped for two days at one of the principal hotels at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and on the third day, when about to leave, called for his bill, which to his astonishment, amounted to 250f. Indignant at this exorbitant demand, he tendered one half of it, but the landlord persisted, and threatened to send his customer to prison, as the law of the place allowed him to do. The Englishman, however, was obstinate and suffered himself to be arrested and locked up. Although the laws of Frankfort give this power to creditors, they at the same time impose on them the necessity of supporting their debtors while in prison, and of furnishing them with clothes and other articles suitable to their position in life. This the hotel-keeper was compelled to do in Mr. Fleming's case, and so little care did the Englishman take of the articles supplied to him, that the former at last found himself minus a sum of nearly 20,000f., and getting tired of the contest, he ordered the release of his captive. Mr. Fleming, satisfied with the triumph of British endurance over German extortion and spite, immediately on his relase, gave a sum to the poor of Frankfort, amounting to double that expended by the hotel keeper.

Another awful tornado has visited Michigan. Among other freaks, it took a young girl up into the air, and at last advices she had not again descended. A bed was taken out of a house and sailed upward, as natural as though the feathers of which it was made, had never been plucked from the bodies to which they once belonged. Near this house is what is called a mound Spring, from which a stream of water sufficient to fill a three-inch pipe is discharged. The spring forms a basin ten or twelve feet in diameter, and about 18 inches deep; all the water was drawn up, and those who observed it say that no water are in the spring for some moments after the tornado passed.—Leader, of May 31st.

HYDROPHOBIA.

A case of hydrophobia in the New York Hospital has attracted much attention. It was that of a young man bitten a few weeks ago in the upper lip by a dog not supposed to be mad. The patient died in four days after the dreadful disease appeared. Dr. Griscom, who attended him in the hopital, states that the patient did not seem to dread water per se, but to dread swallowing it, the principal feature of the disease being a difficulty in swallowing. Water in the form of ice he took without manifesting horror, and it gave him sensible relief. He seemed to die of mere exhaustion, and without violent paroxysms. We have heard of cases of hydrophobia in which the patient had not only a dread of water, but of all smooth surfaces, the presence of a mirror being sufficient to cause a convulsion—Life Illustrated.

☞ It it stated that a remedy has been found for hydrophobia in the seeds of a Mexican plant. An officer of our army, writes from New Orleans to the Washington Union as follows:

I send you herewith some seeds for distribution, used here in the cure of the bite of the mad dog. It is considered as an effectual remedy in the parish of St. Bernard of this State, and the cures which are stated to have been effected from their use are certainly very remarkable. I regret not being able to give you their botanical name; but the plant is a tropical one, coming from Mexico—I believe from the Department of Tobasco. The seeds are called here "graines contra la rage," and are used as follows:

Three of them are broken up or pounded into small pieces, and put into a wine-glass of the best sherry (Xeres), and allowed to steep for about 24 hours, and then being well stirred up, swallowed by the patient. This dose is repeated three times a day for about nine days, when the person or animal may be considered as cured. I am told that even dogs which have been bitten by a rabid animal have been cured by this treatment, or by putting a larger quantity of these seeds in their food.—Ind

Fire Department of Paris.

The working of the Fire Department of Paris is most interesting and instructive. There are about three hundred unmarried men belonging to the division, and they are called "Sappeurs Pompiers." Their dress consists of waterproof boots, very full pants, military jacket, and a helmet of polished brass.

They are drilled in military tactics as well as the duties of the firemen; they live in barracks built expressly for their accommodation. They are paid by especial taxation, and are not enlisted in the government service as are regular soldiers. Their pay varies with their station in the corps. That of the chief is 6,547½ francs per annum. Engineering captain, 4,547½. Major, 3,500. First class (privates), 496. Second class, 459.

From this they pay forty centimes per day for their board. They employ a first-rate cook, who is empowered to buy all the provisions used in the establishment, but they do not appear to have much confidence in his integrity, for two men are appointed to stand by [illegible] that he uses none but wholesome meat and fresh vegetables. This protective committee did not stand between the cook and the men, there is no knowing what they would swallow in their soup [illegible].

We were struck with the cleanliness of [illegible] of the barracks. The men sleep [illegible] on single iron bedsteads—and each man carries when on duty [illegible] scene of an extensive fire, a [illegible] carbine, with a two-edged sword attached in place of the common bayonet. When this is not used as a bayonet, it is carried as a sword by the side. Our visit to the chief's department was exceedingly interesting; a friend procured us a permit to examine the apparatus and manufactures connected with the service, or else we could not have seen them, as the public is not admitted at all times.

We found the chief, an aged man, who looked as if he had seen much service, and he certainly had, for he told us he had served over thirty years, having entered as a private. He was exceedingly polite, and apologized for appearing in his robe de chambre and soiled shirt so late in the morning, but gave as an excuse his being up on duty all night, and only snoozing for a few moments in his chair. By his orders we were shown every thing connected with the establishment. The engines were indeed curious to us. They are not half as large as ours, and run upon two wheels. They are, in fact, a little more than good pumps upon wheels. They are very light as well as small, and a few strong men can carry one of them anywhere they please—up alleys or courts, and, in fact into wide halls or passages of the Parisian houses. In front of the suction part is a box containing fifty buckets made of canvas, rendered impervious to water, two axes, a rope to reach from the third story to the ground, and six torches four feet long, made of canvas, in shape of candles. These are patented torches, and only recently came into general use by the department. There is another large box containing hose, one hundred buckets, long ropes, and rope-ladders. This box also contains several large bags, used for the purpose of lowering women, children, and invalids from the upper stories, when the fire is in the lower part of the house. The able men have the rope-ladders to descend upon. This box is painted black, like the engine, and runs as a tender.

The men are employed, when off duty, in making hose, buckets, hooks, ladders, and engines. Each fireman is provided with a suit of leather, which he wears in descending with water into cellars where spirits are on fire. In this admirable covering he can face the danger and be of the utmost service. When life is risked in any extraordinary and peculiar hazardous manner, the man is rewarded and promoted at the first opportunity.

The yard attached to their barracks is walled in by walls as high as any house in Paris, and here once a week the whole squad go through the most peculiar exercises. Scaffolds are erected very high about the yard, and ropes swing in every direction. They here practice a species of gymnastics of the most extraordinary character, designed to make them perfect in climbing and other feats of useful agility. In one corner of the yard stood two posts about twenty feet high, with a beam resting on them. Upon this high beam the firemen seemed to work with the utmost coolness, and walk about like cats. They would ascend and descend by ropes simply thrown over the beam. It is impossible to convey to the reader any idea of their astonishing agility as here shown.

There is a committee appointed to attend these weekly excercises, and he marks down the good points made by each man in conducting water, throwing the latter, or cool intrepid acting in perilous situations. When a man gets a dozen good points marked to his credit, he receives a reward. They frequently practice working the engine by the word of command. When a fire breaks out in Paris, it affects the people directly the reverse to what the same occurrence does in New York. Here the moment the fire-bells ring, every body rushes to the spot. There it is different, for the law will allow any man to be pressed into "passing buckets," if caught in the vicinity, and hence there is always a scampering to get away from it, instead of to it. It matters not if you are accompanied by a lady or not, the gendarmes have full power to compel you to go to work if your services are required.

The houses are all fire-proof, and hence they have no very extensive conflagrations, such as are lamentably so frequent with us.

The alarm of fire is given by telegraphic signs. There is no noise about it, such as our firemen kick up. A lady resident informed me that one morning upon opening her window, she saw that the next house had been on fire during the night, and found the firemen still there, and that was the first intelligence she had of the fire. Is not that infinitely better than striking a big gong to let every thief and rowdie in the city know where inviting plunder lies, as well as to direct the firemen to the spot?

We before stated in a sketch on amusements, that a fireman slept in every place of public entertainment in the city every night, to guard the place. The department is of course paid for it. The revenue from the theatres, etc., is very large.

When will New York be able to boast of such an admirable force for the protection of life and property?

Sir Edmund Head.

From the London Correspondent of the New York Herald

A short biography of the new Governor appointed to Canada may, perhaps, not be altogether uninteresting to your readers, succeeding, as he does, one who has been so signally happy in obtaining the commendation not only of his own Government but that of all foreigners who have had any relations with him. Sir Edmund Head is the only son of Sir John Head, a clergyman, and formerly rector of Rayleigh, in the county of Essex. The family is of some antiquity, and the Baronetcy upwards of two hundred years old. The father, Sir John, was more remarkable for the urbanity of his manners, his taste for the fine arts, and benevolence of dispositon, than for distinguished talents, although his general capacity was by no means deficient. His son was educated at Winchester, and entered as a gentleman commoner of Oriel College, Oxford; a position which, independent of giving him the right to wear a silk gown, afforded him immunity from the rigid routine and cumpulsory lectures of the college—a gentleman commoner being regarded as a personage whose fortune is already made, and whose sojourn at the University is for the purpose of obtaining every advantage but that of literature. The collegiate curriculum is three years, and after passing through half this period in the usual easy manner proper to his position, his associates are surprised to find young Head devoting himself with the closest application to the study of Aristotle, and deep in ethics and rhetoric—such sciences, in fact as were necessary to the attainment of the greatest possible honors. At the expiration of his term, he was awarded, after a brilliant examination, first class in literis humanioribus. Almost immediately after, a fellowship of Merton College becoming vacant, he tried for it, was elected, and was offered, after a short time the tutorship—an office which he accepted and sustained for five years. His acceptance of a situation honorable to his talents, but considered to be beneath his position as a gentleman commoner of Oriel, and heir to such an ancient baronetcy, explained in some measure, perhaps, the secret of his sudden laborious assiduity. Pecuniary losses in his family had, in fact, told him clearly that he must depend for his promotion in life mainly on his own exertions. His constant access to the continent had early given him a taste for the acquisition of languages, and he has the reputation of being one of the first linguists of the age. While tutor of Merton, an article of his in the London Quarterly Review attracted the attention of the Marquis of Lansdowne, the great English Macænas, to whose judicious discrimination England is indebted for the early rise of Babington Macaulay, the historian. The Marquis found out the author, and the result of the interview was that Mr. Head resigned the tutorship, an appointment worth some £600 or £700 a year, in order to devote himself to the study of ecclesiastical law. He had, however, scarcely taken the preliminary steps before the government made him an offer of a Poor Law Assistant Commissionership, with a thousand a year and travelling expenses. In this situation Mr. Head acquitted himself so well, that on a change of administration, though opposed to him in politics, Sir James Graham, then Minister of the Home Department, promoted him to be chief commissioner, with a salary double the former one.

Now, however, there occurred a change in his tide of fortune; he had succeeded to the family title, and shrewd men of all parties were unanimous in supporting him in the difficult administration his office devolved upon him; but there arose such a clamour—principally urged by the Times newspaper—against the new poor law, that committee, and Parliamentary enquiries without end, were brought to bear upon it; and though the closest scrutiny could find no hole or rent in the conduct of the chief commissioner, the Ministry of the day were obliged to give way, and reconstruct the whole administration: The government of Newfoundland was then given to Sir Edmund Head, and knowing his great talents, it has been a matter of surprise to his friends that his services have not long ago been summoned to a higher sphere. It is not impossible that the presence of Sir J. Graham in the present coalition Ministry may have something to do with his promotion to the government of Canada.—His age is forty-nine. It must be recorded to the honour of Sir Edmund Head, that on conscientious motives he refused to enter into the profession of his father—that of the church—in which some of his ancestors had risen to the highest eminence. It was intimated to him at an early period, after the credit he had done himself at Oxford, that the House of Lords should be opened to him at the earliest opportunity after he should have entered into holy order. But Sir Edmund, with that firmness which is so distinguishing a feature of his character, one which he certainly did not inherit from his otherwise excellent father, was deaf to the Syren voice which wooed him to an early career of purple and fine linen. His private character throughout has been unblemished, and the same fixed will which enabled him to break through the luxurious sloth of his natural position to refuse every pecuniary assistance from his father, and to carve out a line for himself was evident in the matrimonial connection he formed with a lady of excellent family and great accomplishments, but who brought him little else besides to support the title she came to share. If diligence, perseverance, self-denial, and intense labour, will enable him to be a worthy successor of Lord Elgin, Sir Edmund head possesses all the qualifications. Whether he has requisite social endowments remains to be seen. His life has been very much that of a scholar, and it is quite possible he may not have sufficient pliancy of carriage to enforce his measures without violating the Amour propre of others. This, it was said, was his only fault, when Chief Commissioner of the Poor Law, and that a smaller man would have succeeded better. Perhaps his position as Governor of New Brunswick may have pointed out to him the necessity of a less rigid bearing. In honesty of intention and religious uprightness he is not to be surpassed. Sir Francis Head, formerly Governor of Upper Canada, is his cousin.

The Progressive Friends.

This is the name of a society that now has its annual gatherings at Longwood, Old Kennet Township, Pa. It originated, as we understand, in the uneasiness of the radical reform portion of the society of Friends, who thought there was not room enough for their progress in the bonds of that society. The agitation of the questions of slavery and intemperance were, probably, the entering wedge which caused the final rupture. The movement commenced in Ohio and Indiana, and has yearly meetings in those states, New York and Pennsylvania. We believe that this body at Old Kennet is the first that has erected a building for its own purposes. We attended their dedication on Saturday last as the call (which has been published in the Advocate) was broad enough to embrace everybody who wished to go. We found a very neat new building, at a place they have named Longwood, attached to which is a beautiful cemetery lot. Everything bore the neat appearance of quaker grounds and buildings, with a decided improvement on the old society's mode of architecture, an evidence of progress which every one of good taste will at once approve. We confess, notwithstanding our quaker extraction, that we have a decided distaste for that love of old fashioned colors which would not only dress men and women, but all creation in suits of drab. We were pleased then to see, not only an exhibition of good taste in the architecture, but a vase of flowers on either side of the speaker's desk.

The day of dedication was ushered in with a copious rain which continued without ceasing while the day lasted. Notwithstanding this, the house, standing remote from any town or, even country village, was crowded in every part with an audience whose faces exhibited signs of more than ordinary intelligence. Of course on such occasions many would go merely out of curiosity; but that curiosity which would face such a rain, ought to receive ample gratification.

The meeting was opened by calling Chandler Darlington to the chair, and appointing Edward Webb and Mary P. Wilson Secretaries. Joseph A. Dugdal read portions of Scripture, to which he added "quotations from the poets which Paul quoted from." As we had never read these "Old Poets," we cannot remember the quotations. Prayer was then offered by Rev. Theodore Parker, of Boston. Oliver Johnson, of New York, made a brief statement of the rise and progress of the present movement. Professor Harvey, of this city, then delivered a discourse on "Progressive Development," and the relations of religion and science. His chief argument was, that there is no true religion without science, and no true science without religion—a position which few will attempt to dispute. His speech was characterized by erudition and eloquence, and was listened to with profound attention. He was followed by Rev. Theodore Parker, who spoke for two hours and a half, without wearying his audience—which so long a speech rarely fails in doing. It was a continued stream of profound eloquence, rich of thought, rare in beauty, and sublime in its conception of Deity, and His wonderous creation. Never have we listened to so long a discourse with such an absence of superfluous words. Whatever may be said or thought of Mr. Parker's theological views, all must give him credit for being one of the truly great men of the age. We do not care to comment on the sentiments of his discourse. That it was very far from orthodox to the great portion of evangelical Christendom, we have no doubt. That he is honest, earnest and full of love and hope, we are fully satisfied. His ideas are his own, and however unpalatable or unpopular they may be, we have no right to question his sincerity. Hypocrisy generally takes the popular side.

One of the most agreeable parts of this dedicatory service, was the presence of the Hutchinson Brothers, who discoursed their sweet music at intervals, through the meeting.

The regular "Yearly meetings of Progressive Friends" commenced on Sunday, another rainy day. As before the house was filled to overflowing. We cannot find time, or room, to note all the proceedings in their order. The discussion of almost every subject, which the human mind is capable of originating, or contemplating, is perfectly in order there. It is called a religious body, but their manifestations of religion, is chiefly in "testimonies" on humanitory subjects. War, Slavery and Intemperance, are among the prominent subjects of discussion. The meeting seemed to be unanimously Anti-Slavery although a friend of that "Peculiar" institution would according to the "basis" or platform, have been has fully entitled to a hearing as Oliver Johnson, or William Lloyd Garrison, and that the tolerent spirit manifested, we have no doubt they would, have been treated with the utmost kindness. The perfectly liberal spirit of all present, is the novelty and beauty of the whole affair. It disarms the most violent, as it was proved there in the case of two notorious individuals, —man and wife—from this city, who, in a spirit of monomaninac zeal, with reputation not by any means above suspicion, attempted to disturb the meeting, as they had on two preceding years. A few were for treating them differently, but they were finally, fairly overpowered by kindness, and abandoned all attempts at disturbance.

We were not a little surprised, very agreeably to hear an able report read on amusements, from a committee appointed last year. It was a novelty in a body composed so largely of people of Quaker education. It took grounds in favor of dancing under proper regulations and restrictions, and in favor of the drama! Not, indeed, the drama as now conducted with all its concomitant evils, but the drama purified. It treated the theatre as a natural want of the human mind, and argued, that, under proper regulations, it could be made, not only amusing, but capable of the highest moral instruction.

This position which we take to be true, was sustained by men whose heads were grey with years, and who were clad in the costume of the plainest Friends. It was a moral phenomenon we never expected to witness, and we rejoiced at the dispassionate argument to sustain the sensible position of the report. It met, however with a good deal of opposition, and was recommitted to the committee for further consideration, and to be reported on, at the next yearly meeting.

Another theme elicited much discussion viz: the report on the use of tobacco. It was drawn up by Mrs. Henrietta Johnson of New York, and was strongly against any and all use of the weed. Its arguments were unanswerable; and yet the old chewers and smokers could not let it pass without a fight, and some modification. Its final adoption in a modified form, committed the society to a recommendation against its use. By the way, we noticed on the backs of all the seats the notice: "Persons are requested not to eject tobacco juice in this house." What a comment on American manners, to read such a notice!

But we must close our notice of this novel yearly meeting without telling half we intended about it, or speaking of the highly intellectual and hospitable people we met there. Our readers have, perhaps an idea of the meeting; and the people of that vicinity must be seen to be appreciated. We may speak again of our trip to the country.—Woman's Advocate.

The New York Tribune and the Eastern War.

The New York Tribune is displeased with our criticism of its course in relation to the Eastern war.

"The National Era," it says, "astonished that the Tribune should not go for the Allies in the eastern war, and considers our position anomalous, friends as we are to Freedom and enemies of Slavery. Some of the remarks of the Era are quite impertinent, such as 'foreign writers who do missionary work for Russia through the columns of the Tribune'—there being none such, and never having been. Besides, the Tribune is only to be treated in argument as an impersonal representative of certain opinions—as a journal, and not as a collection of individual utterances."

The National Era was not astonished that the Tribune "should not go for the Allies in the Eastern War; but it was and is still at a loss to understand why the Tribune should "go for" Russia. Why not state our position correctly?

We are sorry that the allusion to the "foreign writers" for the Tribune, should have provoked such an ebullition of temper. Our intention was simply to state a fact, which might throw some light on what appeared to us an anomaly. We remembered that that journal a few weeks since, replying to a cotemporary, frankly informed the public concerning the composition of its editorship. "By way of illustrating this subject," it said, "we will state that the staff of editorial writers regularly employed by the Tribune consists of some twenty persons, and that the various articles [on European affairs, the War, &c.—Ed. Era.] on European affairs, which the Courier attributes to one, have proceeded from six different pens." The Tribune having thus spoken unreservedly of its interior management, we did not dream that it would be considered impertinent to allude to its "foreign writers," who constitute a portion of this staff." We do not understand it to deny that much, perhaps the larger portion of its editorials on the Eastern war is prepared by these gentlemen; but the point of the denial is, that they do "missionary work for Russia." Let the people judge between us. If the editorials we refer to are not adapted and intended to bring the Allies and their Cause into disrepute, and create a pro-Russian Public Sentiment, all the world is laboring under a prodigious mistake. But the Tribune, we mean that Impersonality which comprehends the entire phalanx of twenty editors, as one and indivisable, leaves no room for doubt—for continuing its reply to our remarks, it says:

"We are not oblivious of the Czar's attack on Hungary: neither are we of Louis Bonaparte's on Rome; and in that respect France is much more to be abhorred than Russia. As for the idea that the English oligarchic Government is impelled or ever was impelled to wage war by any other motive than selfishness, we consider it too preposterous for serious discussion. Russia, in her outward policy, is a more humanizing agent than Britain. English free trade is a blight to all that touches it; while, since Russia has adopted the protective policy, her industrial means have improved to a wonderful degree, and her onward course of civilization is patent to the world. The best thing that could happen to Turkey would be, that Russia would swallow her up. Protected then in her manufactures, she would flourish. As for the danger to Europe from Russian growth, we have already, on repeated occasions, shown how chimerical that notion is. Moreover, as far as the United States have an interest in the controversy at all, it is that France and England united should not attain a position to dictate to the world. We need Russia as a counterpoise to those Powers. Seen through the free trade spectacles of the Era, liberty and civilization may depend on the triumph of the Allies; to our judgment, however, they have quite as much to hope from the success of Russia. We trust that in any discussion of these points, which the Era may think proper to engage in, it will eschew useless personalities, and courteously address itself to the matters at issue."

This is plain enough. The Tribune desires that Russia should triumph, and thinks that the best thing for Turkey would be that Russia should swallow her up.

We will not say that we are shocked that a liberal American Journal should take such a position; for we have ceased, in this age of marvels and monstrosities, to be surprised at anything. Let us then glance at the reasons by which the Tribune seeks to vindicate it.

1. "Russia in her outward policy is a more humanizing agent than Britain."

2. "England is for free trade; English Free Trade is a blight to all that touches it: Russia is for Protection—Turkey, swallowed up by Russia, would be 'protected in her manufactures,' and she would flourish."

3. "There is no danger to Europe from Russian growth."

4. England and France may attain "a position to dictate to the world:" "We need Russia as a counterpoise."

The outward policy of Russia may be summed up briefly as follows: "Suppression of Revolutionary Movements; Maintenance of Legitimacy; Supremacy of position in Europe and Asia; Territorial Aggrandizement by diplomacy and Conquest." Can the Tribune deny this? Is there a chapter of Russian history, since the era of Peter the Great, which does not confirm the truth of our representation? In its whole career, what scheme of "outward" policy has it devised, what "outward" act has it done, to humanize any portion of the Family of Man?

As to what it has done to degrade and enslave Humanity, let Poland, the Holy Alliance, Hungary, Italy, Turkey, and the indomitable mountaineers of the Caucasus, bear witness.

On the other hand, Britain, badly governed as she was in past times, corrupt and oligarchical as her Administration is now, did not dismember Poland; did sympathize with Hungary; did not aid or abet the subjugation of Italy; has not, at least since the time of Napoleon Bonaparte engaged in any war against liberal opinions or movements; has not labored to maintain Legitimacy or Absolutism; has been anxious to maintain the independence of the various Sovereignties of Europe. Besides, in her immense commerce, she has acted as a great Civilizer. These States, now among the first Powers of Christendom, were once Colonies, the offspring of her "outward policy," which has further shown its humanizing operation in the establishment of the Canadas with free institutions and in planting the same kind of institutions in the Continent of Australia.

It is easy to say that in all these respects she has been actuated by self-interest. Very likely—Governments are not philanthropic agencies—the Government of England doubtless is controlled by a paramount regard to the interest of England, but, in pursuing this interest, it had adopted an "outward policy," which, on the whole, has been humanizing in its tendencies.

What the Tribune says in favor of Russia, on the ground of its having rejected Free Trade, will not find many supporters. English Free Trade has not blighted this country. It will puzzle the farmer to comprehend how he is injured by England admitting his breadstuffs to her ports, duty free; and our manufactures will have to study a long time to understand how the market for their wares is to be benefitted, by the closure of the ports of Russia and Turkey against them. It would be a good thing to have the Allies humiliated, because English Free Trade is tending to break down all commercial restriction, and we should hail the triumph of Russia, because her protective system would shut us out from Turkey as well as her own dominions! That is a queer philosophy.

There is no danger to Europe, says the Tribune, from Russian growth, but it is important to us to have her as a counterpoise to England and France, which may attain a position, to dictate to the world. No danger from the growth of an Empire, which commands Northern Europe and Asia; has already a population equal to that of France and England combined; has been steadily advancing in territory, wealth, and power, for the last seventy-five years; is recognised as the great bulwark against the spread of Liberal Opinions and the success of Revolutionary Movements; and is now engaged in a war provoked by its determination to usurp the protectorate over Turkey, just as the Turks assumed a protectorate over the Greek Empire, before they saw proper to take actual possession of Constantinople! No danger from the growth of a Power, whose career has been one continued aggression upon Europe!

The notion that England and France may attain a position to dictate to the world, is itself "chimerical." No one who has read the histories of these countries, who comprehends the relations between them, who understands the public sentiment, the institutions, and destines of both, can imagine a permanent alliance between them, to control the affairs of the world. In the present crisis, they are one, for a common danger, a common interest, bind them together. But let the war be terminated by the defeat of Russia, and the imposition of just restraints upon her aggressive tendencies, and they will be but too glad of an opportunity for repairing damage, renewing their energies, relieving themselves of exhausting burdens, to involve themselves in a bootless contest for the supremacy of the world, which even could they accomplish it, would serve only as an apple of discord between them. There can be no joint partners in the dictatorship of the world. Timour could not bear to share the sovreignty of Asia with even a brother Mahometan, and so he carried Bajazet captive in his triumphal march. Let the war be terminated, and England would as soon think of cutting her own throat, as joining France in a crusade against the United States. Our position is such, that it must be the interest of both France and England, especially the latter, always to maintain amicable relations with us, and abstain from any kind of dictation. This talk about danger from England and France we could understand, in General Cass, and his tribe of Alarmists, or the Washington Union, and its gang of Propagandists, but it is utterly discordant with the character and position of the Tribune.

We cherish no antipathies to any nation—we are not prejudiced against Russia, but her Government is a Despotism, her Institutions are despotic; she is founded on Principles and upholds Doctrines directly antagonistical to the Principles and Ductrines of this Republic. These facts may not be deemed objectionable by the Slavery Propaganda of this country, but they must prevent all true Americans from sympathizing with it. On the other hand, whatever of Free Institutions exists in the Old World, in such a form as to be effective and command respect, finds its home in Old England. Democracy does not exist there as it does here, but it has root, and is growing; it is too strong to be proscribed, potential enough to have secured a Free Press and the Principle of Popular Suffrage. As for any danger to be apprehended from her power, to harbor such a suspicion is both absurd and unmanly: it implies gross ignorance of the most manifest interests of both countries, and a cowardly doubt of the power of our own.—Nat. Era.

To Correspondents.

An interesting communication from London, C. W., relating to Mr. Fairfield's begging societies, unavoidably crowded out this week.

"X. Y. Z." of Chatham, will appear in our next.

JACOB JONES' letter is too late for this week's issue; will be given in our next.

"J. H. A.," from Chatham, must learn to write with decency, to pay his postage, and to give his name, before he "will see" us again. 'X.Y.Z.' will compare with him, at least; and what we have said of their demi-god Fairfield we can say again, without fear of successful contradiction.

To our Readers West.

Mr. ISAAC D. SHADD, an Agent of this paper, is now on a collecting tour West; he will also receive subscriptions. We hope the patrons of the Freeman will do all in their power to facilitate his business, and use their influence among their friends and acquaintances, to increase our list of paying subscribers. That many persons do not like the Freeman, we know full well; but many do: so let those that do, be zealous to establish it permanently, and those that do not, cease to injure it, and all will go well. We cannot well afford to do without an organ in this country, at present, for our credit and interests; should it be cried down, as is attempted, the disgrace will not attach to the handful who labour for it, but immeasurably to the one who would "preach, lecture, edit for the blacks," and the people at large, who were so eager to have it got up. The assertions of those interested in their own schemes, at your expense, as to a want of appreciation on your part, as a people, already too true in notable individual instances, will then tend too surely to consign you to an unenviable and subordinate position, as a class, and which can only be averted, or from which you can only be successfully rescued, by a press in your interest, well supported and well supplied with able managers; this latter, from the straightened circumstances under which the Freeman came into existence, it has not been able, as yet, to have. Without powerful friends at home, or abroad; opposed to begging, even to prolong its existence; no corps of devoted persons ready and willing, without pay, to make the "welkin' ring" with appeals in its behalf, beyond solicitations for subscriptions, advertising, and jobs; with Editors of the unfortunate sex, who never, in their most ambitious moments, aspired to the drudgery; with this chapter of difficulties at the outset, and attending it, it has had to struggle harder than the interests of any people require, if they too will not put their shoulder to the wheel. But it must not be so; the Freeman must not be discontinued, because obnoxious persons have it in charge. You must not be suffered to fall into the error of starving, because you cannot get a "whole loaf" at once.

Arrangements are being made, which it is hoped will secure for the Freeman a gentleman Editor—one that will see to your interest—with a number of efficient canvassers; by that course, it is hoped, your business will be attended to. The ladies will be pleased, and assist to sustain it, which they will not do while a colored female has the ugly duty to perform; then, it is hoped, that the childish weakness, seen in some quarters, will disappear altogether. Meanwhile, friends, do all you can to make the Agent's tour profitable, and the Freeman prosper. We had a severe winter; you all had; "dull times" was at this office, too; but you can keep him away in future, by paying up arrears, getting new names, and organizing tea-meetings among yourselves. Who will take the lead in the latter movement? It is at home; is not begging, as some wiseacres have said; is for your paper, and they have heretofore been patronized by yourselves and a generous public. Those ready to stigmatise it as begging, do not know all they might, and are not of the class who help any good enterprise.

Toronto June the 3 1855
Dear Miss Editor I wihsh hist paper stoped: and you send in your account
James Baker

The above literary curiosity, good readers, will give you an idea of the beauties of newspaper life. This James Baker knows as well as we do, that his account was settled a few days since by himself; he also knows that there have not been any compulsory measures used, to make him take the paper, or to continue it after the said settlement. What he could have intended to accomplish when the bright thought of inflicting such a gem of a "communication" upon your attention struck him, we are at a loss to tell, unless it was to "ape" quite a class of pretenders to gentility, who think it proper to let their paper run into the next year, say one, two or three numbers, or more, for the petty satisfaction of saying, very patronizingly: "I have ——— numbers in this year: I will pay you"—elongation of the shirt collar!—"and stop the paper." Or, as did a live merchant of this City, after receiving papers for nine weeks over his first year, "Certainly, parties can stop a paper when they please, if they pay for the numbers they get."

So you see Mr. A. subscribes for a year, get two or three numbers, and suddenly the thought: "Too many papers now;" probably not more than that one; "do not like the tone; I'll stop it; and if they will not take what I offer, I'll pay nothing." "It is not ultra enough,—or it is too ultra;—or, the colored people should take our papers: what do they have to say through a paper? one paper is enough for them; if they must have one, there is Douglass' paper, it is plenty good enough for us: WE should not encourage such things; it is clearly opposition, and I'll not encourage it." "You colored people should not encourage such divisions; should help Douglass: you are all one people; your paper here is an experiment, that you cannot carry out." True, Mr. Speaker, and James Baker's letter is evidence; too much ignorance, yet awhile, for the intelligence available to surmount it, if left to colored men alone; so we do not, though thankful for their names, solicit subscriptions from them only—white canvassers are not slow to ask colored men to subscribe to papers they get up, and we follow their example. Brother Baker, going around in his public capacity, as white-washer, or private capacity, as a preacher, hears the "gentleman or my lady" in the above strain, and as a clincher to the imputation of indifference, ignorance, &c., couched in "the experiment," indites for us the missive with the formidable sentence—"I wihsh hist paper stoped."

You are quite welcome to stop the paper, Mr. Baker, when we think of the shoe-leather worse than wasted, to remind you of your many promises, to pay the debt you now so snobbishly pretend to be ready to settle, and which, after more than a year, you finally did. James brings to mind Liberia, dirty, little Liberia, "Dahomey," the "National Council," and another "black" nation or two, where tyranny, conceit, ignorance and impudence, are the "upper tendom." How glad we are that we are not there!

☞ Colored Canadians seem to be completely "stirred up" on the Fairfield business and begging; some for and more against. The "True Band" of Amherstburg, set the ball agoing, and it run well to Windsor, where we know the "two million dollars" of Mr. Fairfield will not take; but since that, there has been "an uncertain sound." We are glad something has moved you all; it was badly needed!

☞ An OBSERVER says that great quantities of pork, in barrels, are being brought to this City from the Western United States, by steamers to Collingwood, in this Province; thence to Toronto, on the Northern Railroad. It is re-shipped from here for the Eastern United States, and from there finds its way to other markets of the world. One thousand barrels now await transportation. This evidence of our adopted country's growing greatness, must tend to strengthen the attachment so frequently expressed for her by all classes. Canada "is hard to beat" in this world!

☞ The Second Annual Convention of the Prohibitory Liquor Law League was held in London, C. W., May 23rd; although the gathering was small, owing to another meeting in Brantford, an address was read by the President, which is full of hope, in the ultimate adoption of a Prohibitory Law, and other encouraging words. Some good resolutions, which we shall give next week, were adopted. We are sorry that the proceedings, with the notice for the meeting of Friday evening, came too late for last week's paper.

☞ At Galt, on Wednesday, the shop of Mr. William Taylor, Watchmaker, was violently entered and robbed of goods to the amount of £250.

☞ Two fires broke out in Elora, and one in Fergus, last week.

☞ A brakeman, named Powers, was crushed to death, when attempting to get on a train, on the Northern Railroad, May 28th.

☞ A colored man, says the London Prototype, named Brown, was drowned while watering a horse in the river, at that place, on the 30th May.

☞ There is a rumour that President Pierce, and family, will visit the Mineral Springs at St. Catharines.

☞ Barnum announces that his Exhibition is to be for white babies, not colored ones. Colored mothers ought to be thankful that they are not to be made liable to the temptation of engaging in the disgusting affair.

☞ Henry A. Wise has been elected Governor of Virginia, by a large majority, over the Know-Nothing candidate.

☞ The principal part of Springfield, Illinois, was destroyed by fire on the 11th of May.

THE PEOPLE'S RECORD:

This is the name of a neat little monthly, gotten up by Mr. Wm. H. Day, of Cleveland, Ohio, and in the interest of the Colored people. The present paper is an able expose of the grievances suffered by a majority of the coloured men West and East, at the hands of the five or six men who do all the talking, trumpeting and dictating. The facts it contains will open the eyes of many who are at a loss to account for the differences among the free colored people of the States, and who attribute to jealousy much of the discontent evident among them, and which has its just grounds in the overreaching assumption, hypocrisy and impertinence of a few recently great men. There is certainly more learning, talent, enterprise and wealth, to be found among that class of the colored people represented by the Record, than any other, but unfortunately (?) for their leaders they have never managed to be borne along by the popular current.

RESULTS OF PROHIBITION IN CONNECTICUT: being Special Returns received from every County, as to the Effects of THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW: containing Contributions from the Governor, and upward of fifty Clergymen, Judges, Editors and private Citizens. Frederick Douglass Paper.

This paper, which is now in its 8th vol., has been greatly improved in appearance, by an entirely new dress, and other changes, which denote great prosperity. It is ably edited by Messrs. Douglass and Watkins, with "Book Notices," by a Miss Griffiths. Although we cannot accept its position, on Emigration, and a few other questions of importance, still, as we like to hear both sides, we like to see it, and wish it success.

NORWALK, OHIO, 5th May, 1855.

MISS M. A. SHADD,—I take my pen in hand, to address a few lines to let you know that I am in the Anti-Slavery field, doing all that I can. I lectured last evening at East Norwalk. We had a good time. I got two subscribers for the Freeman, and you will please send them to Norwalk, Ohio. There is much complaint, because the paper does not come every week.

J. S. CAMPBELL.

We see by the above that friend Campbell is doing good service in Ohio. We hope hope he may meet with great success. He is known in Canada as an energetic man, and as opposed to every thing injurious to Canadians generally. The friends who complain of irregularity in getting the paper, are assured that it is sent to them regularly.—ED.

LEFROY, May 30th, 1855.

DEAR FREEMAN,—I had hoped to escape the task of contributing to a newspaper, and ever to have remained silent in the humble circumstances to which I and the great mass of the injured race with which I am connected seem to be doomed; but I cannot resist the earnest calls made by members of that race, from time to time, through your columns, for in formation concerning the different localities occupied by your friends.

As far as I can learn, I am the only person in this locality who would be disposed to tolerate an inclination to this task; it therefore devolves upon me as a duty, in the performance of which, your readers will expect nothing more than a simple and unvarnished statement respecting whatever here or hereabouts may be of importance and interest to colored Americans.

You will ask what is Lefroy, ? &c. Lefroy is a small village, built on a spot fifty-two miles from Toronto, by railway, and from one to one and a-half miles from Lake Simcoe. This spot was opened by the woodmen within the last two years. I am informed that Lefroy derives its name from Captain Lefroy, a son-in-law to the Hon. Chief Justice Robinson. It is situated on the declivity of a hill at either side of the Northern Railroad, and consist of, as yet, but a very small collection of houses; it is surrounded by wild and luxuriant foliage, at this period of the year, which is the common resort of birds; these birds we find to be cheerful companions: if one awakens here at the breaking of day, his ear is caught by the unbroken chant of hundreds of these wild songsters, and held thus in sweet suspension until the sun has arisen.

The place, at the present time, seems to be in a thriving condition, and the erection of several buildings is contemplated in the ensuing summer and autumn, among which is that of a School-house and place of worship. It is the reception of farm produce for railway traffic, and it offers no small inducement to enterprising pioneers, who have a strong arm and a disposition to endure the hardships of preparing for themselves a home in the "wild woods." Wages are good, and labour greatly in demand, and the future prospect of the place is that of becoming a large and well settled village.

As I have not the slightest impression that the people of Lefroy have the least desire to place colored people where they do not place themselves, I shall use this opportunity to say, that colored men of a free and independent disposition, and who appreciate your motto—"Self-reliance is the true road to Independence,"—who are disposed to lay their hands to that which is respectable for a living, and that only, and who will maintain this disposition at the risk of seeking other quarters for an abode, I think might do well here.

TORONTO, May 28th, 1855.

DEAR MISS SHADD,—It is not a little remarkable with what pertinacity the Colonist, of this City, and some other respectable journals in this Province, oppose the passage of a Prohibitory Liquor Law. I am surprised at the course of the Colonist on this all-important subject, because its proprietors and conductors are gentlemen, I believe, of strictly moral and religious habits, and who cannot be ignorant of the disgusting condition of destitution, debauchery, filthiness, and crime of every kind, too numerous and filthy to mention, produced by the influence of liquor; and yet that respectable journal, the Colonist, opposes the honest and sincere efforts of those who are trying to bring about a check to so monstrous an evil, which takes hold on people and carries them from one degree of wickekness to another, until they are brought to a premature grave. It intrudes itself into happy and unsuspecting families, and there leaves its dreadful mark, an appalling sight, to the astonished beholders and lookers on, scattering the members of families in every direction: some to the Penitentiary, some to the Lunatic Asylum, and others to a premature grave, &c. Yet the Colonist, and its coadjutors, offer no other remedy in the place of that which they so strenuously oppose. Surely they will or must admit some remedy is absolutely necessary; what makes the matter worse, it is making inroads among the females! and we need not go out of this City to establish the terrible fact. A few days ago, while I was standing near the corner of one of the streets, a few minutes, speaking with a friend, a man passed, so overloaded with the accursed thing, that it was with the utmost difficulty that he could keep on his feet; that is bad enough thought I; but he had not got out of sight, however, before a very respectably dressed woman (but I cannot say as much with regard to her appearance, for she was in a similar condition to that of the man who had just passed, reeling and tottering,) passed the same corner, going in another direction. Such cases are to be met with every day, in this City, to a large extent, Sunday not excepted. Married women, while their husbands are at work, leave their homes and children to the mercy of fire or any other accident that might befall them, while they are taking down the intoxicating draught. I know of one woman, at least, who, when she returned home from one of those sprees, as they are called, found her child dead or nearly so. In view of those evils, does it not behoove every man and woman, who has a particle of humanity, to use their influence to destroy the evil? I verily believe that the feeling in this Province, in favour of the liquor law, is extensive enough to compel our legislators to pass it, and those who will oppose it, must be remembered at the polls. They tell us about taking away the liberty of the subject. To what subterfuges people will resort to maintain an evil that is destroying their fellow-creatures all around them. Why, upon the same principle, it might be objected, with equal propriety, to the various regulations, made from time to time, in towns, cities, and other localities, for the preservation of health; for instance, we have a Board of Health, and City Inspectors, whose mandates are frequently oppressive and unnecessary, yet they must be obeyed, or we suffer the penalty of disobedience thereto. They are armed with power to invade our most private premises, without let or hindrance; they have power to compel people to drain or fill their lots, as the cases may require, all on the plea of preserving health. People are compelled, if they build on their own lots, in certain limits, to build certain kind of houses, or none at all. In fact, the various laws and regulations which are in existence, for the preservation of health and good neighbourhood, are too numerous to mention, all of which interfere with the liberty of the subject, as much as any liquor law that could be passed: yet that hue-and-cry has been reserved to be raised to sustain one of the most destructive evils to health and human life that ever a land was burdened with. The evils growing out of the use of liquor are so plain to every body, at all times, that it would be ridiculous to undertake to prove their existence; it would be like undertaking to prove that there are sun, moon, and stars in the the firmament, which no sane person disputes. All then that is necessary for the friends of the liquor law to do, is to force their suit, and the law they can and must have.

TEMPERANCE.

From our Philadelphia Correspondent.

No. VIII.

PHILADELPHIA, May 30th, 1855.

Colonization Meeting—Rev. Theo. Parker's Lecture—Governor Pollock's Visit to the Colored Schools.

Touching the Anti-Slavery cause, the present week has been one of uncommon interest. On Tuesday evening, a Colonization Meeting, presided over by the Governor of this State, came off at the Concert Hall; also, on the same evening, the Rev. Theodore Parker, of Boston, Mass., for the first time, in Philadelphia, addressed a large audience, on the subject of slavery, at the Sansom Hall. Of the former meeting, it would be useless, in my opinion, to waste words in attempting to give a report thereof; at any rate, I feel no disposition so to do, except to briefly remark, respecting Africa, the prosperity of Liberia, and the hand of the Good Lord in the work sought to be accomplished through the agency of the Colonizationist; the usual degree of sophistry, subterfuge, and hypocrisy, which has heretofore invariably characterized the arguments of its advocates were advanced on the present occasion.

As specious and sanctimonious as the agents and speakers rendered themselves, in seeking to promote their vile schemes, there is good reason for believing that in this instance, at least, but little capital was made, notwithstanding the Governor's participation.

With regard to the Anti-Slavery Meeting, the arguments used by Mr. P., in showing up the stupendous iniquities of this government, in sustaining slavery, perhaps were never made more convincing to a Philadelphia audience. The aggressions of the South, one after another, were exposed and condemned, without the slightest apology, as was the pusillanimous practice of the North, in tamely submitting, when it had been in their power, as well as duty, to resist.

The trifling proportion that the South had added (the increase of slaves and wholesale aggressions excepted) to the population, wealth, education, science, great men, &c., contrasted with the rapid progress of the North, were not proven by mere words, but demonstrated by figures and facts, which at once bid defiance, doubtless, to all objections, except the incorrigible.

Notwithstanding the low state of morals, lack of enterprise, and unparralleled despotism controling the South, Mr. P. showed conclusively that the legislation of the nation, United States judges, ministers filling important posts abroad, &c., had always been left to the dictation of the slaveholding power. But least in my attempt to speak favourably of Mr. P.'s admirable lecture, I should detract therefrom, I will conclude my remarks on the subject by briefly alluding to a "secret" which he divulged, relating to certain resolutions adopted by a party of Bostonians, touching the Missouri outrages: "An Appeal from New England Settlers," in Kansas, he said, had reached Boston, for rifles to defend themselves with, at the coming election (which was to take place on the very day of Mr. P.'s lecture), and had been responded to liberally. Several hundreds of Sharp's rifles had been "boxed up and labelled, books," and forwarded for the use for which they were needed. The election has passed, and great outrages have been repeated, as every mail informs us; but of what use the rifles have been, I have no knowledge; they may not be unavailing, nevertheless.

Governor Pollock's Visit to the Colored Schools.—On the 24th inst., Governor Pollock, of this State, graced the colored schools with a visit, having been paying the same compliment to the white schools, for the last ten days previous. At the high school, taught by Professor Reason and Miss Mapps, he was addressed by a talented pupil by the name of Jacob C. White, Jun., in the following language:—

GOVERNOR OF PENNSYLVANIA,—We have not been ignorant of the fact that your excellency has been visiting the Educational and other useful institutions of our city, and have not failed to ask ourselves as we read the various reports in the papers, "will the Governor visit our School?" We know that the chance to see you in our capacity of scholars, was not so good as might be under a different state of things in society around —for you see us, sir, a little family by ourselves, set off from the other youth of this great Commonwealth, and in this fact we are constantly reminded that Pennsylvania does not yet acknowledge the common brotherhood of her children. We are glad, therefore, that in the midst of your numerous engagements, your Excellency has given us an opportunity to present ourselves before you, that you may see that though not recognized in the political arrangements of the Commonwealth, we are nevertheless preparing ourselves usefully for a future day, when citizenship in our country will be based on manhood and not on color. We do not forget the noble sentiments uttered by you previous to your election on the subject of Common School Education; nor are we unmindful of the benevolence of those individuals through whom this insitution now exists. We believe that notwithstanding the restriction imposed upon us in the various avenues of life, we may yet by means of this and other schools, by aid of the mechanic arts and agriculture, and the strength of upright characters and a love for the right—make ourselves useful—worthy of respected citizens in this country of our birth and affection. And in welcoming the Chief Magistrate of this Commonwealth to witness our feeble endeavours, we do it the more cheerfully because we see in you one who believes in the duty of impartial education—because it gives us opportunity to prove to you that we may advance without an alienation from the land of our nativity, and because you permit us to express in your hearing our hope, that as Governor of Pennsylvania, you will support and defend, though approached by the humblest individual, its glorious motto—"Virtue, Liberty, and Independence."

In reply to the address, the Governor arose and said, that he had been busily engaged for the last ten days in visiting the public schools of the City, and had been highly delighted and gratified with the cordiality with which he had been received, as well as with the prosperity of the schools; but in no school had he found so much gratification and pleasure, as on the present occasion. He continued to address the scholars at some length, counselling them to get knowledge; to cultivate the love of morality, christianity, &c., which was all very good. But of our rights, of which we have been so long robbed, and have suffered so severely in consequence thereof, he said nothing. Of course he could not have forgotton the fact, as the address of the pupil so justly made allusion to it. Well, I suppose we must be thankful for small favours, as I believe he is the first Governor of Pennsylvania who has ever condescended to visit a colored school, in connection with visiting the popular schools of the "approved classes."

At Miss S. M. Douglass' school, the Governor was welcomed by a few pertinent remarks from the teacher, which was courteously replied to by the Governor. The third class read a piece very beautifully, after which, the visitors retired. I should have stated also, that in the high school very creditable exercises were performed by the first classes of males and females. Of the other colored schools, I am not able to report, as I had not the privilege of being on hand.

Omar Pacha has offered to take and hold Simpheropol with his Turks, if the French will support his advance.

The allied forces in the Crimea are now 200,000 men, viz.: 120,000 French, 30,000 British, 40,000 Turks, 11,000 Sardinians.

The army in the Crimea is now well supplied with luxuries as well as necessaries of life, but some fever and cholera prevailed.

On May the 10th, a severe combat took place during the night along the right attack. The affair lasted an hour and a half, when the Russians retired under the cover of their batteries. Loss considerable on both sides. Night attacks also made of Telegraph line, on the nights of the 11th and 12th by the Russians. On both occasions they were gallantly repulsed.

The attacks of the Russians were spiritedly continued up to the 22nd. On the 25th the French occupied the large place between the central bastions and the sea shore, where the enemy would collect large forces.

The English cruisers in the Baltic had brought several prizes to Elsinore.

MASSACHUSETTS.—The Governor has vetoted the bill making a grant of a million and a-half of dollars to the Western Railroad Company.

The Senate rejected the bill abolishing capital punishment.

The new liquor law went into effect on the 20th inst. Unusual activity was displayed by the wholesale and retail liquor dealers, in despatching demijohns and mysterious packages to all parts of the city and suburbs.

The Personal Liberty bill, which is intended to nullify the Fugitive Slave Law, was passed by the House on the 17th inst. It provides that "No justice of the peace, sheriff, constable or jailor shall arrest or detain, or aid in arresting or detaining, any person for the reason that he is detained as a fugitive slave, under the penalty of imprisonment and a fine. Also, that the writ of habeas corpus may be issued by all courts of record, judges of probate, and, in some cases, justice of the peace; and, instead of the proceedings authorized by the act of 1850, substitutes a trial by jury, and that no confessions, admissions, or declarations of the alleged fugitive against himself, shall be given in evidence, and that the jury shall have the right to return a general verdict. It also deprives any attorney of Massachusetts, who shall act for a slave claimaint, of the right to practise in Massachusetts Courts of law." The bill then passed finally, yeas 229, nays 43. It had previously passed the Senate.

Gov. Gardner votoed the Bill as unconstitutional. Whereupon the Senate sanctioned the Bill over the veto by a vote of 32 to 3, and the House by a vote of three to one.

OHIO.—A public meeting relative to the late outrages in Kansas, was held in Cleveland, on the 12th. The resolutions were reported by Judge Spaulding, formerly of the Supreme Court. The following were the most important:—

Resolved, That we feel constrained to admit that a crisis is rapidly approaching in the affairs of our country, when conduct will be more efficacious than speech, when daring deeds will take the place of "vaunting words." But we venture to enunciate as the sense of this meeting, and as we believe the sense of a large majority of the voters of the State of Ohio, the following plain propositions: 1. Slavery must be interdicted in Kansas and Nebraska. 2. No more slave territory shall be acquired. 3. No slave State shall henceforth be admitted into the National Confederacy. 4. The Fugitive Slave Law must be totally repealed. 5. Slavery must be abolished wherever it now exists by force or sanction of Congressional law. 6. The "Free Soil" of our State must be made to possess the efficacy of striking the manacles from off the limbs of every human being who is so fortunate as to plant his foot thereon.

Resolved, That we deprecate a dissolution of the Union if it can be preserved without doing despite to the Declaration of Independence: but if we can only perpetuate the American Confederacy of States by perpetuating and perpetually extending the curse of negro slavery, and by violating national compacts and the true principles of pupular sovereignty, then the Union will not be worth preserving.

Sudden Death of a Slaveholder—Twenty-Nine Slaves Emancipated.

Over a year since, Mr. Elijah Willis, of Williston, Barnwell District, South Carolina, came to this city and executed, in the office of Joliffe & Gitchell, a will, bequeathing to his wife and her heirs and assignees all his property, real and personal, to the value of £150,000, consisting of two plantations well stocked, and from forty to fifty negroes. His wife, Mary Amy Turner, and children, six in number, are mulattoes, and were held by Willis as slaves. Mr. Willis agreed with Messrs. A. H. Ernst, Edward Harwood and John Joliffe, whom he made his executors, that they should be manumitted, and that the executors might dispose of the remainder of the slaves, at his death, as they deemed best. Mr Willis returned to his plantation.

Yesterday morning, he arrived from the South, on the Jacob Strader, with his wife, her mother and the six children. After securing a back to convey the family up to the Dumas House, Mr. Willis, with a daughter held by each hand, approached the carriage and was in the act of stepping in, when he was seized with a palpitation of the heart, to which he was subject, and, falling backwards, expired in about five minutes. Coroner Menzies held an inquest over the body, and the jury returned a verdict in accordance with the above facts. Mr. Willis was about 60 years of age, a very respectable old gentleman, and has been married to Mary Amy about thirteen years, and always manifested towards her and the children a warm affection.

He has been in bad health several years, and his relatives, who reside in the Barnwell District, have frequently importuned him to give up his business and travel with his family. He left home about four weeks ago, not, as they supposed, to make said trip, but to come to this State, free his family from slavery, and provide them with comfortable houses on free soil. Having done this, it was his intention to return to South Carolina, settle up his affairs, and live the remainder of his life free from all care and anxiety. Bad health for several years was an additional inducement for him to pursue this course.

The remains of Mr. Willis accompained by the family, were taken to the Dumas House. The family appears to be deeply afflicted by Mr. Willis's sudden death. They are kindly cared for. His last will is in the possession of Flamen Ball, Esq., counsel for the wife of Willis, who will attend to her business, and see that she obtains that bequeathed to her. The funeral of Mr. Willis will take place to-day.

Those who affect to believe that the abolition of slavery would lead to universal amalgamation at the North will please make a note of the above case.

From the Cincinnati Columbian, May 22.

On the 23rd of February, 1854, a fine-looking, corpulent gentleman, apparently about 60 years of age, came to this city in search of Dr. Brisbane, from whom he wished advice as to the proper course to pursue to effectuate the manumission of a number of his slaves. Not readily finding Dr. Brisbane, he obtained the advice of John Joliffe, Esq., and had duplicate wills drawn up. One of these he took with him, and the other he deposited with Mr. Joliffe, to be used if he should die suddenly, and the will in his possession he accidentally or purposely destroyed. He stated that one of his brothers had died very suddenly, and that he himself, being subject to palpitation of the heart, was liable to be summoned to another world at a moment's notice.

Elijah Willis—that was his name—staid only a few days in Cincinnati, but his bright benevolent countenance and manly frankness were not soon forgotten by those whom circumstances had thrown into contact with him.

Returning home, he drew up a complete inventory of all his property, and, making two of his neighbours his confidants, he deposited this inventory with them, to be used in case of his sudden death, at the same time making them pledge themselves not to make it public previously.

He was largely engaged in the lumber business, and raised no crops except what were necessary for the support of the twenty-nine full-grown slaves, and the numerous slave children that he owned. The lumber got out by the slaves was rafted down the Edisto river. In this business Mr. Willis had amassed a large estate. He was noted for the kindness with which he treated his slaves, who were never driven with the whip, nor shut out by a lock from the stores of provisions. They ate, in the kitchen part, of the same food that Mr. Willis ate in the parlour.

A number of the relatives of Mr. Willis, who are all in comfortable circumstances, lived near him, but seldom visited his residence. His housekeeper was a dark, but very shrewd mulatto woman, whom he purchased, with her mother, brother and sister, about thirteen years ago. This housekeeper's name was Mary Amy Elmore Turner. Her Father, who was owned by another master had deserted her mother, and for this was sold to a cotton planter in Alabama.

Amy, as the housekeeper was ordinarily called by Mr. Willis, while the slave of a former master, a Mr. Kirtland, had a colored husband, by whom she had three children before he went South.

This woman, by her faithfulness and shrewdness, soon acquired great influence over Mr. Willis, by whom she had three children. She watchfully superintended his domestic affairs, attended to the wants of the slaves, and advised as to business.

Mr. Willis, feeling concerned for the future welfare of his children, and urged thereto by Amy, at last determined to free her, her mother, her six children, her brother and her sister. When he came to Cincinnati, one year ago, and had his will written, it was to carry out this intent.

After his return home, he arranged all his business as rapidly as possible, and, taking notes for outstanding debts due him, made preparations for disposing of his entire estate and moving to Ohio, where he proposed to locate on a farm, with Amy, her mother and the children. Finding that the expense of bringing Amy's brother and sister and their families would be considerable, and that there might be some difficulty in at once securing a home, Mr. Willis concluded, finally, to come North with Amy, her mother and the children, and having secured for them a residence, return to close up the business and bring the others.

On last Tuesday week, they left home, as thus proposed. On reaching Louisville, they got on board the steamer Jacob Strader, and reached here at six o'clock on yesterday morning. Soon after the boat touched the wharf, Mr. Willis and his company went on shore, and he called a carriage, when, just as he went to reach one of the small children into it, he breathed heavily. Amy asked him if he had another attack of palpitation of the heart. He nodded affirmatively, gave two or three heavy breathings, and then fell dead. Just at that moment, some one asked where they came from; Amy's mother did not answer, and was threatened with being kicked into the river. Some one urged Amy to go on board the boat again, and she refused. By the advice of a friend, she at once secured the money (about $350) in Mr. W.'s possession, notes and due-bills amounting to three or four thousand dollars, a gold watch and other valuables. She was taken, with the trunks and the body of Mr. Willis, to the Dumas House.

Dr. Menzies being called in, held an inquest, when a verdict was returned in accordance with these facts.

Mr Ball, of the legal firm of Chase & Ball, being called in, the will of Mr. Willis found on him was opened and read, when it was found that he had willed his entire estate to Amy and her children, and had appointed John Joliffe, A. H. Ernst and Edward Harwood as executors. This will is a duplicate of that left in the care of Mr. Joliffe, which has not yet been opened. If the property is obtained, each of these colored children will have a fortune of twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars. The body of Mr. Willis will be buried to-day. The executors of the will are all residents of this city.

Extraordinary Premiums to Agents

For procuring Subscribers for

TICKETS AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,
IN PERHAM'S GREAT
100,000 GIFT ENTERPRISE!

The distribution of the Gifts being definitely fixed for JULY 5, 1855.

Any person sending $10 may deduct 10 per cent. or will receive 11 Tickets.

Each person sending $100 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Mammoth Gold Pen and Case, valued at $10.

Each person sending $200 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be

Presented with a Silver Watch, valued at $25.

Each person sending $300 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Gold Watch, valued at $50.

The person who shall send, before the 5th of July, the largest amount above $500, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Piano, valued at $200.

I have been induced to make the above liberal offers in order to remove a settled objection in the minds of your committee, to having the distribution take place while there remain in my hands tickets unsold, and for which cause they seem fit to defer the partition of the gifts, which was fixed for the 27th inst., to the 5th of July, as will be seen by reference to their proceedings, published below. I assure you that the postponement is as vexatious to me as it is to those who have purchased tickets. I therefore hope that each and every one now interested, will co-operate with me in the effort to dispose of the few thousand tickets remaining unsold, and thus advance the interests of the whole body of shareholders.

Respectfully yours,
J. PERHAM.

TO THE PATRONS OF
Perham's Third Gift Enterprise.

At a meeting of the Committee of Shareholders of Perham's Gift Enterprise, held at the Academy Hall, Broadway, on Wednesday Evening, April 18th, 1855, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted and ordered to be printed:—

Whereas, in view of the fact that several enterprises have been started and carried on with a seeming positive purpose of defrauding those who could be persuaded to purchase tickets therein; and such fraudulent proceedings have exerted an injurious influence in the sale of tickets in the enterprise of Mr. Perham; and whereas, it is deemed essential that all the tickets should be disposed of before the distribution takes place, be it therefore

Resolved, That in order to allow time for that purpose, the distribution be postponed until the 5th of July, at such place as may hereafter be determined on.

Resolved, That the committee have undiminished confidence in the integrity of Mr. Perham, and in his disposition to conform to all his published promises to his patrons.

ROBT. BEATTY, JR,
Chairman.

REMEMBER!
The Tickets are only $1 Each,
And each Ticket admits Four Persons to Perham's Burlesque Opera, 663 Broadway, New York,

PERHAM'S GIFT ENTERPRISE.

The committee appointed by the Shareholders in this affair, to distribute the 100,000 Gifts amongst the ticket holders, have deferred the distribution until the 5th of July, on account of there remaining unsold some few thousands of tickets. Mr. Perham, ever anxious to meet the views of his patrons, offers extraordinary inducements to Agents to engage in the sale of the remaining tickets, so that there may be no mere delays, which are unquestionably as vexatious to him as to those who have purchased tickets in his enterprise. We commend the reading of his advertisement to our patrons, and hope that each and all will lend a helping hand to bring the matter to an early and satisfactory consummation.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchae of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid,)
J. N. STILL,
11 Brooklyn, L.I.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR.)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16TH VIC. CAP. 85. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. All packages, containing Soap, Candles, Pipes, Nails, Chains, Paints, Spices, Nuts, Vermiceli, Macaroni, Glass Tin, Canada Plates, Tins, Trunks and Jars containing Merchandise, and all other packages in which the goods are usually exposed for sale, or which necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold. And that the following Packages are to be exempt from payment of Duty, viz: Bales, Trusses, Cases covering Casks of Wines or Brandy in Wood, Cases and Casks containing Dry Goods, Hardware or Cutlery, Crates and Casks containing Glassware and Earthenware, Cases containing Bottled Wine or Bottled Spirits, and all other packages in which the goods are not usually exposed for sale, or which do not necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold.

By Command,

F. HINCKS, Inspector Gen.

IV. And be it enacted, That spirits and strong waters having the flavour of any kind of spirits or strong waters subject to higher duty than that imposed on Whiskey, shall be liable to the duty, imposed on the kind of spirits or strong waters of which they have the flavor as aforesaid, from whatever substance they may be distilled or prepared; but nothing in this Section shall be constructed as a declaration that spirits and Strong waters so flavored, were or were not before the passing of this Act subject to the duty imposed on those of which they have the flavor.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The "Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings.

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the greography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everythnig is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures, and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one impeial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

A Scientific Museum and Reading Room,

WHERE all the lovers of human progress and perfection may investigate and apply the sciences of PHYSIOLOGY and PHRENOLOGY in harmony with all other sciences, so as to obtain a correct knowledge of themselves and the laws that govern them, and the universe as ordained by our Creator.

In the Museum there will be Casts, Masks, and Engravings of great and noted characters of various parts of the world, such as Sir Walter Scott, Napolean Bonaparte, Emmett, the great Poet, and a great many others too numerous to mention, which can be seen in the Museum.

ADMISSION FREE.

Rooms over Mr. JOHN H. MOORE'S Store "Emporium," Second Story, Colborne Street,—entrance on Market Street outside, up first flight of stairs, where Mr. PERSONS will make examinations in the above Sciences, give instructions as to the Laws of Life and Health, point out talents, their various kind and degrees, and how to apply them to the best advantage, in whatever Trade, Business or Profession you may be engaged in, and also for what you are best adapted to pursue most successfully in any of the various occupations in life.

CHARTS

Will be given with the greatest care and accuracy, both written and printed, or either. Printed Charts, containing the whole Science of Physiology, Phrenology, Physiognomy, highly artistically illustrated with one hundred engravings, serve in explaining the two extremes of the good and bad, large and small, in a scale ranging from one to twenty-one degrees, which enable the individual to read character at first observation, in any attitude, place, or position, including rules for finding the Phrenological organs, and directions for making examinations. Price five shillings, currency, including examination.

Ordinary Printed Charts,	£0 2 6 c'y.
Average written description,	0 5 0 "
Large written description	0 10 0 "
Large and most useful description, giving a complete directory guide, in detail, in every department of your nature that this age will admit of or demands,	1 0 0 "

These descriptions will be written in clear and plain style, and quite practical.

Small written descriptions, or outlines of character may be given for 2s. 6d.; children under 12, half price; under 2 years gratis.

Perfect satisfaction will be given in every particular, or no pay required.

Applications will be gratefully received for visiting Families or Parties at their own residences, in any part of this town.

Orders will be received for any of Fowlers & Wells' publications, wholesale or retail, and promptly attended to,

I consider written descriptions of inestimable value, for which reason I have given this department a more thorough investigation.

Orphans, Widows, and the Poor, will receive verbal examination free of charge.

Hours of attendance from 9 o'clock, a.m., until 10 o'clock, p.m.

WILLIAM PERSONS.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

BUFFALO, Feb. 21st 1853.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

THE

Universal Phonographer,

ORGAN OF THE

American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,

Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonotypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a Journal of THIRTY-TWO pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing, Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic Intelligence, Notices to Correspondents, Important Items of News, Biographies of Phonographers, "Gems of Expression," "Glances," Sketches, Eloquent Extracts, etc., etc., in four different methods of representing our language; Romantic Print, Phonetic Print, Phonetic Long-hand, and Phonetic Short-hand (in both of its styles). And all for ONE DOLLAR. Subscriptions should be prepaid and addressed thus: "ANDREW J. GRAHAM, Phonetic Depot, 358, Bleecker Street, New York."

☞ Any person desiring to become practically acquainted with the different departments of the Writing and Printing Reform, cannot better attain his or her wish than by sending the publisher $1 50 (the fifty cents in stamps), for which there will be furnished the necessary instruction book (pre-paid), and the Universal Phonographer for one year.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

CANADA FARMER,

A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

CONSTITUTION

OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and moreover, as the friends of the compassional characteristics and claims of the latter, we pledge ourselves to employ our power in our respective capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens, also. To promote, thereby, harmony and to cultivate a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, who will stand on the watch tower to notify the citizens of the country against the unjust, malicious, rebellious, and designs of many in the United States and this country who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counseling the former to look "God passage" out of labor, to the disgust and, perhaps, opposition of the latter, and thereby to create sectional animosities or to look from the West, the same from the South, in order to rebel against the sons of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain; to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and both. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

Information Wanted

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. If she will call on or communicate by letter with Robert Phillips, Centre St., Toronto, she will hear news of much importance relating to her property.

Poetry.

ROBERT OF LINCOLN.

BY W. C. BRYANT.

Merrily swinging on briar and weed,
Near to the nest of his little dame,
Over the mountain-side or mead,
Robert of Lincoln is telling his name;
Bob-o'-link, bob-o'-link,
Spink, spank, spink;
Snug and safe is that nest of ours,
Hidden among the summer flowers.
Chee, chee, chee.

Robert of Lincoln is gaily drest,
Wearing a bright black wedding coat;
White are his shoulders and white his crest,
Hear him call in his merry note,—
Bob-o'-link, bob-o'-link,
Spink, spank, spink;
Look what a nice new coat is mine,
Sure there never was a bird so fine.
Chee, chee, chee.

Robert of Lincoln's Quaker wife,
Pretty and quiet, with plain brown wings,
Passing at home a patient life,
Broods in the grass while her husband sings
Bob-o'-link, bob-o'-link,
Spink, spank, spink;
Brood, kind creature; you need not fear
Thieves and robbers while I am here.
Chee, chee, chee.

Modest and shy as a nun is she;
One weak chirp is her only note.
Braggart and prince of braggarts is he,
Pouring boasts from his little throat,—
Bob-o'-link, bob-o'-link,
Spink, spank, spink;
Never was I afraid of man;
Catch me, cowardly knaves if you can.
Chee, chee, chee.

Six white eggs on a bed of hay,
Flecked with purple, a pretty sight!
There as the mother sits all day
Robert is singing with all his might
Bob-o'-link, Bob o'-link,
Spink, spank, spink;
Nice good wife that never goes out,
Keeping house while I frolic about.
Chee, chee, chee.

Soon as the little ones chip the shell
Six wide mouths are open for food;
Robert of Lincoln bestirs him well,
Gathering seeds for the hungry brood.
Bob-o'-link, bob-o'-link,
Spink spank, spink;
This new life is likely to be
Hard for a young fellow like me.
Chee, chee, chee.

Robert of Lincoln at length is made
Sober with work and silent with care;
Off is his holiday garment laid,
Half forgotten that merry air,
Bob-o'-link, bob-o'-link,
Spink, spank, spink;
Nobody knows but my mate and I
Where our nest and our nestlings lie.
Chee, chee, chee.

Summer wanes; the children are grown;
Fun and frolic no more he knows;
Robert of Lincoln's a humdrum crone;
Off he flies, and we sing, as he goes
Bob-o'-link, bob-o'-link,
Spink, spank, spink;
When you can pipe that merry old strain,
Robert of Lincoln come back again.
Chee, chee, chee.

Miscellaneous.

Influence of the Moon.

cognizable by its influence on a body and nervous system enfeebled by disease; in the same manner that some ailments portend wet weather by increased pain. Persons of delicate nervous temperament, when the weather is foggy, and the atmosphere oppressed with moisture, often aver that they become more cheerful when the tide is high. On the other hand, the clear-minded Olbers, in a lecture on this subject, stated that in a prolonged and extensive medical practice, he had never perceived the slightest variation in any way connected with the moon. Even lunacy, which derives its very name from our satellite, has of late years (in its original sense of a mania dependent upon or caused by certain lunar phases) been pronounced a fallacy, an utterly unfounded superstition.

The lunar influence on vegetable economy, is another interesting branch of inquiry, in which some progress has been made of late years. There appears to be no reason to doubt that the moon exerts an influence on the growth of plants. There are certain nights called by farmers "growing nights." from the great progress perceived in the growth of vegetables. This is particularly perceptible in such rapidly increasing plants as peas, cucumbers, and Indian corn. It is well-known that all fruits ripen sooner when exposed to the full lunar effulgence, than when deprived of it. A gentleman who was engaged for thirty years in cutting timber in Demerara and the neighboring shores of the American continent, published a paper in the Annals of Philosophy, in which it is stated that trees cut in the full of the moon, are inferior to those felled at its opposite phase, because they are much sooner attacked by worms, are more liable to rot, and will split spontaneously at certain periods after their fall. The writer of the article in the Review was informed by an intelligent farmer, that he had often noticed, while peeling oak bark for the tanneries, that at some parts of the month this was very difficult, at others comparatively easy. This he was inclined to refer to the action of the moon on the sap. Dupois, in his "Travels in Terra Firma," tells us that the planters of equatorial South America pay strict regard to the position of the moon, in sowing and reaping their crops.

Equally curious are the lunar influences on the animal economy. It is well authenticated, that if the flesh of an animal lately killed be exposed to the light of the full moon, at certain seasons, in a few hours it will be a mass of corruption; while another piece of the same animal, deposited near, but protected from the rays, will remain perfectly sound. The American Indian, it is said, always shields his game from the moon's effulgence.

The moon has also something to do with those internal convulsions which make our earth tremble under us, and sometimes swallow cities in their mighty throes. This idea has been entertained for more than a century, but it is only within the last year that the facts has been satisfactory established, by the researches of a French savant, M. Alexis Perry, who has shown that earthquakes are more frequent when the moon is at or near its perigee, but diminish when towards its apogee.

From this rapid survey of the present state of our knowledge concerning lunar influences it is evident that there is yet much to be learned on this subject, as well as some things to be unlearned. The field of inquiry is a broad and interesting one, and will doubtless receive the measure of attention to which it is entitled.—N. E. Farmer.

Summer Beverages.

As the warm season is near at hand, when our appetites will naturally require some beverage that is satisfying and agreeable when athirst, I wish to give to the farming readers of the Cultivator a few recipes for making healthful, cheap and agreeable drinks for the summer season, which I know from experience to be excellent for the purpose. The first is known by the name of seidlitz powders; these powders are absolutely invaluable; they are excellent for all derangements of the bowels, liver, kidneys, costiveness, &c., and if the people would use them generally, they would contribute largely to their general health. They are sold at a very high price in the drugshops, and are frequently so old as to be nearly worthless; therefore, it is essential that we should all know how to make them at first cost, which is trifling. The following is a recipe for making one powder, and any number can be made by the same rule: Rochelle salts, 2 drachms; carb. soda, 2 scruples; tartaric acid, 35 grains. Dissolve the salts and soda together in one glass, then dissolve the acid in another glass, throw them together, and drink during the effervescence. To those who have no scales for weighing such small quantities, I will say, that one teaspoonful of the salts will answer for two drachms and a half; a teaspoonful for two scruples of soda, and about a quarter of a teaspoonful for thirty-five grains of acid.

The next in order is, what I shall call a medicated lemonade, which is certainly a very agreeable and healthy beverage for the summer season; it is made as follows: White sugar, one pound; tartaric acid a quarter of an ounce; essence of lemon, thirty drops; water, three quarts. Mix any quantity, for more or less can be made by the same rule. There are some who prefer white sugar, but I like brown nearly as well. Thus can a lemonade be manufactured without the use of lemons, which in my estimation is far superior to that made from fruits, without much trouble or expense.

I will close this communication by giving a few receipts for making beer. First, white spruce beer, which is made as follows: three pounds of loaf-sugar, four gallons of water, one ounce of ground ginger, a little lemon-peel, and enough of essence of spruce to give it a flavor; add a cup of good yeast, and when fermented, bottle it close. This is a delightful beverage. Second, imperial ginger beer, which is made as follows: cream of tartar, one pound, ginger, two ounces, white sugar, seven pounds, essence of lemon, one drachm, water six gallons, yeast half a pint; bottle and tie the cork down.

I forgot to say in its proper place, that in drinking seidlitz powders, they would be made more palatable by putting a spoonful of brown sugar into the glass with the salts and soda before pouring the acid on it.—Boston Cultivator.

Root Crops.

Carrots—Sugar Beets.

If the analysis of carrots, given in the last number be remembered, the inference is an easy one, that carrots must be valuable as food for animals. Well conducted experiments have demonstrated carrots to be far superior to turnips and ruta bagas, as food for milch cows. Cows should not be fed wholly on carrots, nor indeed on any one thing unless it be grass or some green crop; but in the winter season, cows require something more succulent than dry hay or fodder. If the carrots be cut with a machine for the purpose, and corn meal or wheat bran sprinkled over them, cows will milk well on them, and the butter will be of a good color; neither does it impart any nauseous flavor to the milk.

Carrots are used now in our cities for horses, particularly, horses that are well cared for; the circus men who generally have fine horses, understand this, and they are willing to pay 40 to 50 cents per bushel for them. It is a great mistake to suppose that animals do not require food with innutritious material in it, or a substance that cannot be converted into blood. There are organs adapted to carry off the execrementitious matter, and if there is no such matter in the food, they must become debilitated for want of exercise.

But this is not all, the adaptation of succulent food to the stomach of the herbivora need not be dwelt on, all experience proves the necessity. Cows will give more milk when fed on good grass, than when fed on dry hay, though they may have a stream of water running through their stables from which to slake their thirst, yet we cannot tell that the hay has lost any chemical substance, which the grass contained except the water.

Sugar beets, probably rank next to carrots in value, and should be planted at the present time, if not already in the ground. They may be planted in a similar manner, and my description for planting carrots, will apply equally well to sugar beets. Sugar beets require less labor than carrots, as they grow more rapidly at the start, the leaves getting above the weeds can be easily hoed, besides they should not stand so close in the row. Carrots are usually weeded by hand two or three times, and then thinned out so as to stand 4 to 6 inches apart; beets should be a foot apart at least. Between the rows the cultivator, with a hind tooth knocked out, should be frequently passed: and for carrots, I have known a subsoil plow to be used with great success. The plow is run within 3 or 4 inches of the carrots on each side of the row, thus making the soil loose and mellow for any required depth, say one foot or 18 inches, without disturbing the surface of the ground. When it rains the water easily sinks in this mellow soil, and readily permeates the undisturbed portion where the carrots are growing. In this way, they stand the drouth much better than they would with a mere surface cultivation. The seed both of carrots and sugar beets should be soaked before planting; some recommend mixing a few radish seeds with the carrots in order to mark the rows and thus enable the farmer to destroy the weeds before they have had time to overshadow the carrot plants.—Olive Branch.

To Make Friction Soap.—Take 5 pounds of brown soap and 10 pounds of fine sand. Heat them well together over a slow fire; add whatever kind of scent and coloring that you desire; and while this is yet warm, make it up into quarter pound cakes, and it will readily sell for ten cents a cake. It is an excellent article for the toilet, and all kinds of washing, clothes excepted. It will cure skin diseases of every description.—Marion (Ind.) Republican.

Tea Hair Wash.—An infusion of tea, when not too strong, is said to be very useful in preventing the hair falling off. The best plan is to pour boiling water on to the leaves after they have been used for a meal. In ten or twelve hours it may be drawn off, and placed in a bottle for use as required. A table-spoonful of any perfumed spirits may be added to every half pint of the wash. It should be applied to the scalp with a piece of sponge, or a very soft brush.

Valuable Medical Discovery.—A few days since an Irishman upon one of our wharves was obliged to suspend work in consequence of being afflicted with an ulcerated sore throat. His employers, pitying his sufferings, sent him a jar of nice current jelley; and to their great surprise he resumed his labours on the following morning with his throat and head completely enveloped with bandages highly discolored. Upon being questioned as to his health and peculiar appearance, Pat replied: "That was a bewtiful medicine ye gave me, and did me a power of good. I made it all into a nice poultice, and put it on the outside of me throat and it's far better than all yer doctor's stuff!"

Rich.—An Irishman presented himself at the polls in Chilicothe, Ohio, and his vote was challenged. He said he had his papers, and swore he would produce them. Home he went, and returned and presented to the judge his papers. What laughter convulsed their honours we will not say, when on opening the supposed papers, they found them to be a dismissal from the New Jersey Penitentiary.

From the London Empire.

Austin Henry Layard.

The name of Layard has, within the last few days, reached an importance which makes it, more than ever, a national name. A new man has cast himself into the waters of political strife, and not alone London, not alone England, but Europe itself watches his career. A deep laid combination of vested interests in the House of Commons has sought to extinguish him, not in the ordinary way by which eloquent mouths have been closed, that is to say by gold, but rather by violence and intimidation. Parliament knows well that no money-bribe can calm down the independent utterances of the member for Aylesbury; it resorts, therefore, to the weapons of uproar and anger; and the world looks on watching the issue with deep interest, anxious to know whether Mr. Layard will fall before the wrath which his energy has kindled, or like the burning bush of truth will not pale—nec tamen consumabatur.

I beg to predict that he will stand the test, and come forth from the ordeal triumphant. I know from personal experience the sterling character of the gentleman about whom I speak, and it is from a knowledge of his character that I am enabled to say a brilliant career in the region of politics awaits him. By no means an orator, in the classic sense, and by no means a politician in the sense of the clubs, Mr. Layard is yet an honest man, a business man, a man of resolute energy, a man whom money cannot corrupt, and these are the qualities which, in past ages, have made the human being the safety of a nation, and, in a Roman sense, the contemporary of the gods. Neither Washington nor Cromwell were orators, and yet they redeemed their country; Lamertine was an orator, and France fell beneath his feet. What England wants at this critical moment is young, vigorous, healthy blood—open, generous, candid, undisguised speech—business, honesty action. Mr. Layard gives all this. Yet young in years, he stands at the head of the British youth, to lead this youth onwards to deeds of integrity and lawful ambition, and to prove to mankind that England will yet live and shall not die.

Now it is this very business talent and uncompromising devotion to duty that the English aristocracy, especially its Whig section, have sought to extinguish in the person of Mr. Layard. The Whigs ever have sagacity to lay their hands upon rising ability, and no sooner did they find that the aspiring youth who had raised Nineveh from the tomb was the object of fame, than they said, "Let us secure that man." Through Lord Granville he was, therefore, chosen to a high post in the Foreign-office, and through Lord Granville's Whig friends he was elected member for Aylesbury—that is to say, the money influence was forthcoming for this purpose, and without it no Buckinghamshire constituency would have sent him or any other to Parliament. Thus Mr. Layard began political life in the school of the Whigs, and by the grace of the Whigs, and was destined forever to skip over the saloons of the Whigs, and, as a good disciple, it was intended he should become their obedient slave, and eat whatever crumbs of office they cast beneath their table for Samaritan dogs and untitled gentry. But, as I have intimated, Mr Layard had a soul as well as a body; and he had written books which proved that his soul was fresh, young, and untainted. For example, in his first literary production he had said, "Who cannot but admire the poor, half-naked Arab who, entrusted with a message from his Sheikh to the Pasha of Bagdad, walks proudly up to the great man's sofa, and seats himself unbidden upon it as his equal?" That was the principle which Mr. Layard dared to carry out in the House of Commons among the proud aristocracy of England. He would work with them as an equal or not at all; but if the Whigs had conceded such a condition, they would have given up their divine right and supremacy. Mr. Layard persevered, and they cried, "Who art thou?—who made you what you are?—officious fool! sit down in silence or go to Constantinople and Nineveh." Mr. Layard continued to persevere while the Osbornes, the Lowes and the Molesworth were snuffed out—he persevered, I say, and the aristocracy raised the cry that he was not modest; but at last he became a power, and then it was, a few nights ago, that the Commons sought to terrify his spirit, and then it was he became deserted even by those members who speak in his favour in public meeting; but mark the end! Baited by the aristocracy, bow-stringed by the Whigs and deserted by friends, he has earned a name which only requires to be pronounced in order to compel the great congregation of Englishmen to rise from their seats and grow wild in their expressions of applause. Therefore, when Mr. Layard, in future, speaks in the Commons, he speaks with England behind him—a power which the greatest of our living statesmen cannot at this time command. He has the people by his side, and we shall soon see how Whigs and Ministers, and Life Guardsmen, will mitigate their ferocity.

Three years ago I had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Layard deliver one of the first (if not the very first) political speeches it was his fortune to make. He had gone down to Aylesbury to present himself before his adopted constituents, and it became his duty to appear in the presence of the people. With great frankness, and without any reserve, he confessed his ignorance of political affairs, and this confession emboldened a clergyman to say that Mr. Layard might do very well to dig up the old cities of the East, but was a most unfit man to legislate for modern society. Mr. Layard retorted that he had unfortunately been occupied in investigating the records of the past rather than the present, but he appealed to the assembly to say whether he might not be of some service to his country, seeing he had discovered that cities as great and noble as our own had existed in an old world, and had encountered ruin through corruption, misgovernment and priestcraft. No great depth of mind was needed to perceive the force of this observation. Mr. Layard's audience burst into a loud cheer, they helped the Whigs to send him to the House of Commons, and all this happened, I need not say, before war with Russia and Sebastopol inquiry made it plain that there is an England to be saved as much as that there was a buried Nineveh to be brought to the light of day. The question is, can the man who did the one execute the other?

And why not? Are we forever to be told that it is a crime to aspire to the government of a country, and that British youth must have no ambition except to bow its neck beneath the feet of hereditary Statesmen? The British youth who, in times of danger, aspires not to lead the nation out of its troubles deserves not to live, and the same God that gave wings to the eagle and strength to the ox implanted the daring passion of ambition in the breast of the young man, for it is the youth of the country that gives life, and without its youth it ceases to be. Old politicians like the Whigs have lived upon violated professions. They have outraged the sense of justice, and they have profaned the sacred name of liberty. They have made the science of politics an intrigue, and the government of the State a question of self-interest. But the time has come for this abominable thing to be put down; if not put down let Britain perish. The choice is inevitable. Well, let the British youth, with a Layard to teach it action, choose that political craft should sink and die, and all is well. Mr. Layard traversed the sacred East, and his eyes penetrated deeper than the surface, even beneath the crust of the earth, and he said, "Nineveh lies there, and Nineveh shall be laid open." It was done. He had no fortune, he had few friends, but it was done; and greater deeds remain for youth and energy to effect, if only the healthy manhood of England will look beyond the materialistic phisosophy of the age and the accursed thirst for gold.

British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society.

The Sixteenth Annual Meeting of this Society was held on Friday evening at Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate street, Mr. Samuel Gurny in the chair. The Secretary, Mr. Chamerovzow, read the Report. After referring to the progress of the Anti-slavery movement in Cuba, Brazil, Persia, Turkey, Holland Spain Africa, and numerous other countries, it alluded to America, where the struggle between freedom and Slavery had been most severe. The progress of the movement had been somewhat impeded by the Know-nothing party, but, nevertheless, it was most encouraging. In Holland, a Bill had been passed by, which, in 1860, 3,600 slaves in the Dutch East India Colonies would acquire their freedom. In Portugal, it was the desire of the Government to take early steps for the abolition of Slavery, and some steps had been taken in the right direction. During the year the Committee had carried on an unusually active correspondence in the four quarters of the Globe on the various subjects embraced within the Society's operations. An address had been recently forwarded to Marshal Espartero on a continuance of the Slave-trade to Cuba, and on the subject of Slavery in the Spanish Colonies, requiring that, in accordance with treaty obligations, all the slaves who have been surreptitiously imported and their descendants shall be set free. The Report referred with regret to numerous instances in which Englishmen residing in England were the holders of slaves in foreign colonies. It also touched on the connexion existing between the Turkish Missions Aid Society and the American Board of Missions, which, it was alleged, was implicated in the question of Slavery. Every effort was being made to procure a repeal of the law of South Carolina relating to colored seamen, but nothing decisive had been done. The financial statement was more satisfactory than in former years. All the liabilities of the society had been discharged, and a small balance remained in the hands of the Treasurer.

The Rev. A. B. Hill moved, and Dr. Hewlett seconded, the adoption of the Report, which was agreed to.

The Rev. Cuthbert G. Young, Secretary of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, addressed the chair. He had come to the meeting anxious lest any allusion should be made to the Society to which he belonged, which were composed of men who were outspoken on the subject of Slavery—such as Lord Shaftesbury, the Hon. A. Kinnaird, Sir Edward Buxton, and others. He stated that the Americans had been at work with their Missions in Turkey for twenty-five years, that these Missions were almost independent of the American Board of Control, and that the London Society, which had sent out to them 1,100*l.*, in order to extend native agency and promote Scriptural education, did not think they were thereby promoting Slavery. They would tremble at the mere thought of giving such encouragement while it was also a fact, that [illegible] Missions in Turkey, though con[illegible] the American Board, are earnes[illegible] Slavery. He, therefore, suggested [illegible] sion of that passage of the Report [illegible] flected on his Society.

The Secretary rose and said, the qu[illegible] tion was not whether the American M[illegible] maintained the principles of Slaver[illegible] whether Abolitionists, while declaring [illegible] very to be sin, were to unite with men [illegible] give their countenances to a Board w[illegible] upholds Slavery as the American Board do[illegible] He maintained that persons assisted th[illegible] Board who assist their Missionaries; an[illegible] however, good men may be, it is a seriou[illegible] error to assist a Society which, while it [illegible] spreading the Gospel in one part of the wo[illegible] is violating it in another.

Mr. Gurney rose and said, that Lord Shaftesbury, the Hon. A. Kinnaird, Thomas Binney, and James Sherman, were men desirous of truth and righteousness, and who thought that in the peculiar position of Turkey, there has been an opening for throwing in the light of the Scriptures. Those gentlemen, he was sure, had done all for the best. The meeting had, therefore, better leave the question of connexion with the American Board alone.

Mr. George Thompson seconded the second Resolution, enjoining upon every friend of humanity the principles of the Society. The speaker was proceeding to enjoin upon the meeting that the way in which they should act, in order to ensure complete success, was to preserve the principle of abolition pure, by denouncing any such connection with the American Board as had been alluded to in the Report, when

Mr. Gurney rose and said, that he must prohibit Mr. Thompson from discussing that question, as it had been sufficiently dwelt upon already.

Mr. Thompson said he would not touch upon it again.

Mr. Gurney repeated, that it was his judgment that the subject should not be further alluded to, and he would not suffer Mr. Thompson to re-open a point which had already been discussed.

Upon this, Mr. Thompson sat down; but, being loudly called for by the meeting, rose again, and continued to address it, denouncing, amid repeated bursts of applause and cheering, every one, no matter what their rank, who in any way whatever would countenance a Pro-Slavery Board.

Mr. A. O. Wilcox seconded the Resolution.

The Resolution was supported by William Croft, formerly a slave.

After the third Resolution was proposed by Mr. F. Burke, of Montserrat, in a speech in which he bore witness to the successful results of abolition in the West Indies, and testified to the moral and intelligent condition of the emancipated negroes; and after the Resolution had been seconded and carried, Mr. Alexander was about to move a vote of thanks to the Chairman, when

Mr. Gurney rose, and said that he hoped no vote of thanks would be moved, as he should certainly not accept it. He was in some doubt, indeed, whether, after the attack upon Lord Shaftesbury and his friends, he should not have left the chair; but he felt that they were quite above any attack that had been made.

Mr. George Thompson protested, that he had no thought of attacking Lord Shaftesbury, and said, that he had nothing of the sort in his mind.

Mr. Gurney replied, that he could not otherwise interpret George Thompson's observations, in reference to the Turkish Mission and the American Board.

An attempt was made by Mr. Alexander and the Secretary to adjust the difference; but Mr. Gurney still refused a vote of thanks, and said he would not again preside.

The meeting then separated.

The Anti-Slavery Meeting in Crosby Hall.

It is with much pleasure that we publish, in the second edition of to-day's Empire, a copious report of the Annual Meeting of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, which was held in Crosby Hall, last night. The meeting equalled in attendance, enthusiasm, and general interest, any similar demonstrations which have taken place of late years; and seeing the grave and peculiar circumstances in which we were now placed, it more than realised our anticipations. It will be seen from our report that a great variety of topics connected with the momentous question of slavery were discussed by the speakers in an earnest and animated, but practical and instructive manner, which, while it evoked the expression of a true English feeling against the abomination of the slave system, at the same time afforded the audience that information which it should be the chief aim of such meeting to diffuse. The report of the secretary contains an able digest of the principal events which have marked the history of both the pro-slavery and the anti-slavery movements in the four quarters of the globe during the past year. The discussion on the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions was the only subject which disturbed the harmony of the proceedings; but we do not regret that on such an appropriate occasion an opportunity presented itself for again placing before the British public a statement of the true position of one of the most powerful pro-slavery religious institutions which exist in the United States of America. We cordially wish success to the labours of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, and earnestly trust that many meetings like that which took place last night may be held in time to come under auspices.—Empire.

scene of confusion and uproar occurred last t, about 10 o'clock, in and about Forest Hall, ch is, so far as our knowledge extends, with-a parallel in the history of Georgetown. It ppears that a party of colored persons had rent-d (through a white agent) the hall, for the pur-ose of having a ball, for which a permit had been obtained from the proper authorities. A magnificent supper for the occasion had been prepared, and the guests, in great numbers, assembled; but their horror and dismay, just as they were about to enter into the festivities of the occasion, a cry was heard, 'the Philistines be upon thee;' and lo! some two or three hundred white persons, mostly youths and boys, from different parts of the town, entered the building, demolished the crockery, glass, &c., destroyed all the viands, and caused the frightened guests to flee in every direction. Such disturbances are certainly very disreputable, and the surest way to prevent a recurrence of them in the future, will be to refuse per- mits for any more. They are certainly calculated to engender a state of feeling and stir up an excitement which might result in much more serious mischief than was done last night.

Where the blame for this disturbance properly rests we are not prepared to say, but we feel satisfied that every good citizen will agree with us, that the renting of the hall, and the granting of the permit, for such a purpose, was, in the first place, decidedly wrong, and that the failure on the part of the Corporation officers to make some efforts to prevent the disturbance, or restore order after it has been commenced, was equally wrong, if not more so, * * * * * *

So great was the uproar for an hour or more,
that several persons living in the immediate neighbourhood, especially timid and delicate females, became so terrified and alarmed as to be made quite sick. For the sake of morality and good order, we sincerely hope that the proper authorities will, in future, take a decided stand to prevent all such exhibitions, by refusing all permits, let them come from what source they may, or be recommended by what party soever.'

The Washington "Organ" also contains a statement of the affair, as follows:—

Quite a breeze was created among the inhabitants of our sister city, upon the news being told them that a party of colored individuals were to give a ball in Forrest Hall, last night. A large number of white people entered the hall, before the time for the gaiety to commence, and destroyed the refreshments and other arrangements and dishes, and caused a general stampede among the blacks. A meeting then assembled, of citizens and passed a resolution denunciatory of a white man named Richard Trunnel, who hired the hall of Mr. Forrest for the negroes.

Three colored women, belonging to Mr. G Ridgely, who were on an errand, were met by the crowd, and were most unmercifully beaten, being suspected of intending to go to the ball."

How the municipal authorities, who gave the permit to the negroes, but dared not protect them in the enjoyment of it, have sustained themselves after performing an act which the laws authorize them to perform, we know not. The owner of the hall (who, we think, is a Northern man) has been compelled to exonerate himself by showing that he rented it in ignorance of the fact that persons of colour were to occupy it in the enjoyment of a ball and festival, gotten up at their own expense, and by the special permission of the municipal authorities, and which would, no doubt, have been conducted with quite as much propriety as any entertainment of like character, in which the most refined of the white population of either Georgetown or Washington have participated during the past season. The greatest regal tyrants the world has ever seen have usally desired to see the masses of the people forgetting their political oppression in songs and dances, and festivity, even commanding them to sing the Songs of Zion; but the oppression of American slavery is so fearful and maglignant in its nature, that the slave, in the evening hour, when the labours of the day are past, may not feast upon the good things he has bought, nor dance, nor be joyous, but must crouch before the jealous and tyrannical mob who rush in upon him, "demolish the crockery, glass, &c., destroy the viands, cause the frightened guests to flee in every direction," and beat women "unmercifully" whom they suspect of intending to go to the ball!

How long will this Republic be disgraced by the commission of such deeds, even at the very portals of its Capitol?

An advertisement in the Washington Star contain the following passage:—

When the company had assembled, and were about to commence their entertainment, a large number of white persons thrust themselves into the rooms, insulted the women, beat the men, and carried off the eatables and devoured them more like beasts than civilized beings. Some of the women, to avoid insult, locked themselves up in a room; but the assailants awaited without for two hours, until they made their appearance, when was renewed the work of asssult. The screams of these poor creatures were indeed terrible, and aroused many a family from their peaceful slumbers During the first part of this occurrence, (and nearly throughout), I observed a watchman with his mace, standing quietly looking on, apparently enjoying the fun as much as the disturbers of the peace.

Your correspondent is an extreme Southern Rights, pro-slavery man, raised in a slave State, and a citizen of a slave Commonwealth; but he must say such occurrences as above noted, aside from their annoyance to the neighbourhood, and the disgrace they attach to the town, are calculated to give weight to the arguments of the Northern fanatics.

FACERE BONUM.

P.S.—I learn that the ball was for the benefit of a poor widow (colored) woman.—National Era.

A Little Like Kidnapping.

J. W. Bell, a colored boy 18 years of age, of Dayton, who has been of late employed on several steamboats on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, and more recently on the steamer Falls City, was left at Grand Lake, Ark., on the 10th May, having been put off that boat which is not satisfactorily explained, but under circumstances of a very suspicious character. He was arrested prob'bly as a runaway slave, and unless the pr[illegible] forthcoming, will be sold into slaver[illegible] a trip to Canada.

gentleman at Grand Lake, at the boys instance, wrote the following letter to Mr. J. P. Ohmer, of this city:

"GRAND LAKE, ARKANSAS,
Monday, May 14, 1855.

"MR. PETER OHMER—Dear Sir: Yesterday the steamboat Falls City put off a mulatto man who says his name is John Bell, and that he is free, and that his home is in Dayton, Ohio; that he has one sister there, and a brother in Miamsburg, who keeps a barber's shop there; also one sister in Xenia Ohio. The boy, John Bell, was taken up yesterday, by some gentlemen, and they intend to take him to the jail of this county. He is now in my house in my charge, and I will try to get them to let me keep him till he can prove himself free, which I have but little doubt is so. If he is taken to jail his expenses will be great before he gets out. So if his friends come after him, they must be prepared, as he is left here without any money, or very little. He wishes you also to inform his brother of it, and Thomas Mumford, and by so doing you will much oblige John Bell.

"N. B.—Write me at Grand Lake, Chicot County, Arkansas, as soon as this reaches you, as the people here are willing to render unto Cæsar, the things that are Cæsars, and not take property from one that does not meddle with their concerns, as is often done by the people of Ohio. Yours, &c.,

HENRY GODFREY.

Bell was for some time in the employ of Judge Hart and is well known in this city.

The evidence of his freedom were yesterday forwarded to Arkansas.—Dayton (O.) Gazette, May 23.

Degrading Influence of Slavery.

The N. Y. Tribune takes off the Louisville Courier in his following pithy and characteristic style:

The Louisville Courier publishes a paragraph entitled "A Nut for the Abolitionists," and especially commends it to THE TRIBUNE. The kernel of this nut is that two slaves having escaped from Kentucky to Canada, soon wished to return, and so wrote to their master, Jas. Shawhan of Harrison County.—The latter accordingly went to Canada for them, but an Abolition mob prevented them from returning with him.

We assure The Courier that there is no difficulty in cracking this nut; we have cracked several like it before. The effect of Slavery is to deprive man of habits of self-reliance, and it is quite possible for a slave brought up on a plantation as a mere animal, working and fed like a horse, not to be able to make the best use of his liberty on regaining it, nor to feel the value of the change from bondage to freedom. That occasionally an escaped slave is unable to take care of himself and prefers the kennel life of a plantation is not to be wondered at therefore, and it only proves how bad a system must be which can take away from a man all his power of self-sustentation and render him to the level of a servile dependent of another.

But this is a mere drop in the ocean. There are now about 4,000,000 slaves (how frightfully they increase!) and of these some 1,500 say, run away every year. How many of this 4,000,000 would run away if they could, and how many would return? How many, too, of the 1,500 who now get off, go back? Here is a nut for the slave-drivers to crack. Let The Louisville Courier try it.

The above statement by Mr. Shewhan, relating, as it does, to an incident that took place at Chatham, in this Province, a few weeks since, will be read with interest by some. The Kent Advertiser and the Colonist, of this City, two defenders of the "gentleman," may gather from it the design of Shawhan, in visiting Canada. It is very clear that the Advertiser, at least, showed greater zeal in preserving untarnished the fair fame of Mr. Shawhan, as a gentleman, than he has done himself. The Colonist did not take any trouble, in any way; there was a nice opportunity to rap the "negroes," and true to instinct, it tried to do so. So, instead of "business at London," it turns out that he did come to Canada to get his slaves. Who will believe his statement, that he made a call in passing, in compliance with their invitation, to visit them? Sir Gullible lives once in a while in Canada, too! Neither the Louisville Courier, Advertiser, nor Colonist, has seen fit to contradict the falsehood, about an "abolition mob preventing the fugitives from returning with him;" having attempted to censure the colored people for "making him leave in double quick time," and having held him up to the world as a much abused "gentleman," they are probably ashamed to expose the lying propensities of their protege. No! Mr. Courier, a mob did not prevent the slaves from returning; but after Shawhan had made himself obnoxious, by inquiries at their meetings, and other clear evidences of a bad intention, the colored people did what you taught them by your southern example to do, they made him "git" We are utterly opposed to mob law, believing that in this country, the proper way is the better, and hope that the colored people will yet see to it, to bring the strong arm of the law to bear upon every slaveholding miscreant who may intrude himself into the Canadas, for such purposes as Messrs. Shawhan and Payne have come. But in view of all the circumstances, we see less depravity in such demonstrations, as that made at Chatham, than in the eager defence for slaveholders, set up by professedly moral and christian presses.

The Colonist, and Advertiser, may do their best to write up the American slaveholder, an honorable, truthful gentleman, but they will fail; his whole life is one of lies, deception, and outrage, against the slave, and his in-bred vices will not change

There is some[illegible]using, too, in the fidgety solicitude—exhibited by parties who occasionally whine about the slaves' wrongs,—about men of Shawhan's class, whenever one is caught in his own trap; one would think there was a fellow-feeling,—but no, they do not appreciate your solicitude, defenders of the chivalry! As well think of a penetrable spot on the horny sides of a rhinoceros, as of a healthy place in their petrified consciences—they are quite beyond your good offices.

The Colored Men of Canada and the Eastern War.

The proposition of the Chatham Committee is excellent. From what we learn, the idea meets with general favor; and we hope to see that many meetings will take up the matter, so nobly begun at Chatham. The colored people of Canada are right on the war question. Their experience of tyrants is too thorough, not to feel, that with a power so determined to disregard the rights of other sovreignties, and people, as Russia, there must be prompt and decisive action; and also that the Allies who have assumed the fearful responsibility of arresting the great invader, and especially to Her Most Gracious Majesty, there should be given the most substantial sympathy that a subject can give to his sovereign, viz.: vigorous arms, and determined, willing hearts. We do not despair of the destruction of the begging influence ultimately, when we remember that this loyal movement, has its rise in the same section where its minions have been rampant. Such men must be led by nobler men than Fairfield. Though a friend to peace, when there can be honorable peace, we believe there should be "war to the knife" in the present crisis, and we also believe that no men are more willing to do their mite for the discomfiture of the common enemy can be found, than the colored men of Canada.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following are the Resolutions passed at the Annual Convention of the Canadian Prohibitory Liquor Law League, held at London, C. W., 23rd May, 1855:

It was moved by Dr. BEATTY, seconded by Rev. Mr. CLARKE, and

1. Resolved, That the friends of Temperance admit of no grounds of discouragement from the failure to secure the enactment of the Prohibitory Liquor Law by our House of Parliament and affirm that the temporary disappointment, will, with the blessing of God, and the unwearied exertion of thousands of "good men and true," result in obtaining a more perfect law, and in preparing our country for enforcing and sustaining the same.

2. Resolved, That the thanks of the "Prohibitory Liquor Law League," and of all friends of Temperance and of the highest interests of our country, are due to the members of the Provincial Parliament, who for twelve successive hours "from night till morn" so nobly contended for and finally carned by so successful a majority, the Prohibitory Bill through the final reading of commitee of the whole House, in despite of the sophistry, duplicity, and bullying of the opponents of the measure, and that the majority of that vote demonstrated the safety of the bill.

3. Resolved, That the conduct of the opponents of the Prohibitory Bill, in meanly and contemptibly resorting to a shallow subterfuge to "burke" the Bill, when they could not by fair means resist its becoming law, deserve and will secure the hearty detestation of all friends of Temperance, and this feeling should especially apply to those members of the House who dare not directly vote against the measure, but who seemed to have gladly availed themselves of the Speaker's decision for its destruction.

☞ We hear that the Rev. S. R. Ward is going to the East Indies as a Missionary.

☞ Remember, a Mass Meeting in Chatham, on the 23rd instant; and simultaneous Mass Meetings in other places.

WINDSOR, JUNE 3, 1855.

True Band Society—Refugees' Home—Poor Fugitives, &c.

DEAR MADAM,—Permit me to inform you of what is going on in our village. We have formed what is called the "True Band Society," under a different form from any other that you are acquainted with. The inhabitants of this place, as you know, are opposed to begging, in every form, and were among the first to speak out boldly against it, but they are not opposed to this "True Band;" and we hope that just such an one may be formed in Toronto, as we have here, and not like some of those formed in other places. I think there would be a great change in the Province, were such to be formed as ours.

We held a meeting last night, and passed, by a large majority, a vote against the begging system. I hope to be able to give, next week, a full account of it, and other things going on here.

We have had, in the past week, six new arrivals from Virginia, two women and four men, all happy to have landed safe on this side of "Jordan," and very grateful to those who aided them in their journey. As we want to stop that disgraceful begging, we shall keep you apprised of the proceedings of our Society, and our progress to that end. A former letter from this place, alluded to the Refugees' Home, permit me to reiterate that there is great dissatisfaction there at present. I had a conversation with some of the settlers on the land, and they told me, among other things, that as the price of land is raised in that part of the country, so the Refugees' Home Society has raised the price on the poor fugitives, not upon those just coming to buy and settle only, but upon those who have been on the land some time, and who bargained for the land at a lower rate. One of the poor fugitives who paid his money, went to raise his Deed from the Society, and was told, that as the land was more valuable, he would have to pay more, for they could not let him have it at the price they agreed to. He angrily demanded his money. This has caused great excitement among the settlers who have not Deeds,—they do not expect to get any now. Some have spent a deal of labor on the land, and it justly makes them feel indig[illegible] that they have escaped from bondage to this land of liberty, and then to fall into the trap made by the mean system of the Home Society. The Society is controlled and the land owned by men in the States, although the money was begged by Foote, and others, for the fugitives, and, although the men against whom the injury is being perpetrated would pour out their life blood for the country that offers them a shelter. Have we to ask then, if our wise fellow-subjects will not interpose, and save these injured men from the rapacity of those Michigan traitors to humanity, who, in the name of the poor slave, and shielded by their pretended honesty and a self-assumed position mislead the world about the Home Society? Our noble Parliament, under Lord Elgin, very wisely refused to allow the Society, by Mr. King, to become a Land speculating Society, and, neither did Mr. King want it to be or make it. How is it then that a company of men in Michigan can carry out all the tricks of a jobbing company, on our soil with impunity? There is neither justice, humanity, nor reason in it; and those parties in Canada or the States, who, in their speeches recommended the Refugees' Home, and whose papers are now silent, knowing, as they do, the great wrong done by the begging for it, are the slaves worst enemies. The men now on the Home, should stay there; the land is theirs; they should not pay one farthing more; and if the Home Society tries to eject them, through the Rev. C. Foot, or any other body contemptible enough to do towards the fugitives as he has done, and can do, let them defend their firesides. There are dark passages in the history of that Refugees' Home, that will compare with scenes in Kansas, for arbitrary character; and all I hope, is, that fugitives, when they find themselves insulted by the Society's men, will stand their ground, and that as the land is for them, insist on keeping it at the first price. I would go further, and say, as it is theirs, let them go take it into their hands—who will say nay?

No. II.

CHATHAM, JUNE 6, 1855.

DEAR M. A. SHADD,—I promised, in my first, to say something in this one "more particularly" about our business men. I would take great comfort in fulfilling that promise, just now, had I not to deplore the "gust" my unfortunate No. I. has raised. It is certainly unpleasant to have to take a flogging at any time, but not more so to me, than to have to stand by, in silence, and see others take the "dressing" that I was to have; but such has been my misfortune. There was too much truth in the statements made for those who, with Fairfield, and the other part of the community, though agreeing with the statements, say the differences among "our people should not be told:" so there is a disposition to strike down free scribbling, at least, by the men I have always looked up to. The oaks of Chatham, are, I fear, disposed to bend to the storm. Every one able to cross a t, has been quizzed as to who wrote X. Y. Z., and one inoffensive son of the North has had to bear the castigation so fully prepared for me. It is too bad to begin a career of the kind under such unfavourable auspices. I know I should have owned the charge, and so saved Mr. W." I know it was cowardly to stand by and see a man deny having said what I did, and not step forward and say: "I am your man;" but prudence tells me it would not have been safe. There are some great changes to make, and if, by too little caution, I should prevent them from being consummated, I would ever after regret that I had not remained incog. You, Madam Editor, as well as myself, are charged with doing wrong to Dr. Stanton. That is, I beg to think, a gratuitous charge, as the gentleman's propositions, being hand in hand with Fairfield, as he was, show what he is. Your Philadelphia Correspondent did not know what trouble was in store, when he called for correspondence from different places—see my predicament. Just let W. S. or any other man get the "colored population" of Chatham once agoing, whether right or wrong, and they will scare the Quaker out of him. There is talk of a meeting to scorch X.Y.Z.; but if they do "pay" him, they must catch him first. To be as sober as a judge, the fetters we wear are galling—right here in Canada! Such threats! such hints! I am tired of them. The first thing you hear, I may be off to the Crimea, to fight the Russians, or up to Dawn, to help friend Scoble, who I hear is very busy doing nothing for the refugees, just at this present. Miss Editor, if our noble sable brethren would each and altogether put their shoulders to the wheel, what a time there would be! Why all of those old dead white and black oaks that cumber their grounds, would have to fall, when they pushed on the car; but no, when they make a bad move, they will not own it, and do better; they contend that it is right, and put their great big understandings, flat down upon a poor fellow like your servant, when he dares to speak, and cry out "hush, cover it over, do not let the public know," when the public have known it all along. They have not learned yet, that their pranks will out, as well as other murder.

After all, they are clever fellows! Did not that Kentucky man, Shawhan, leave? The Mayor took him under his "wing," and assured the colored Chathamites that he was sent for; so the people dispersed; but he left in a hurry.

Should they find me out, if I start, I shall keep agoing; should they not, and I live through the excitement, you may hear again from—

STRATFORD, 7th June, 1855.

MISS SHADD,—I with many others have been much delighted with the perusal of your valuable and interesting paper, which I feel confident is the most useful paper, of its kind, ever published in Canada; appreciating, as I do, anything that is good, I wish to become one of its supporters, believing, in so doing, I may be the humble instrument of promulgating that truth and information which is so essential for the welfare of our people; therefore, you will much oblige, by sending regularly to my address, the Provincial Freeman. Enclosed, please find amount of subscription, two dollars.

Yours, truly,

At a Meeting of the Colored Citizens, held in Chatham, Kent County, Canada West, 6th June, 1855,

IT WAS UNANIMOUSLY RESOLVED,

To appoint a Committee to draft a call for General Mass Meetings of all citizens or persons of Canada who are now under the protection of Her Majesty's Govornment, to express their sympathies for the Government, in her present struggle with Russia, and to designate to Her Majesty their readiness to rally to her assistance whenever a call shall be made.

We, the said Committee, therefore respectfully invite all citizens or persons of the various parts of the Province, to assemble in general mass meetings, on the 23rd of June, in their different localities, for the above-mentioned purpose.

Brethren! we would say to you, as you value heaven-born Liberty—as you value the protection of Her Majesty's Govornment, and the esteem and approbation of the world, rally to a man to the mass meetings, and let your voice be heard from one extremity of the Province to the other!

Yours, respectfully,

J. M. BELL,

CHATHAM, C. W., June 6, 1855.

To the Editress of the Provincial Freeman:

DEAR MADAM,—Allow me to offer a few remarks, through the columns of your valuable paper, if you think them worthy of a place. The subject I refer to is called the "True Band" Society, got up by one Mr. Fairfield, and Doctor Stanton, a Quaker, from Newport, Indiana. Those two gentlemen were through Canada, a few weeks ago, and I believe for the purpose of organizing societies among the colored people; and after using considerable exertion in other parts of this Province, holding meetings and forming societies, met, as they said, with great success. They were here in this City; they held two meetings; the first to make their object known, and the second, to form a society. These meetings were held in the A. M. E. Chapel, and were largely attended; indeed, I was at the first, and there was such a crowd, I scarcely could get my nose inside the door; this was held on Sunday evening, May the 6th, and Mr. Fairfield addressed the meeting; he spoke at a considerable length, and insisted on the necessity of organizing societies throughout Canada, among the colored people, for the purpose of placing them in a position to receive all monies, clothing, and other donations that may be sent in to Canada for their good. After Mr. Fairfield had got through speaking, Doctor Stanton got up and made some remarks, and read a Constitution that he had previously prepared, under which he said they might form societies, as that was the only way they could ever grow up to be a people. After the Doctor had ended, Mr. Fairfield again rose, and said: there were large sums of money in the United States, waiting to be sent to the colored people of Canada, and would be sent as soon as they could be organized into societies. By this time the people were excited to the highest pitch, and some one moved for a meeting to be appointed on the following evening, for the purpose of forming a society. This appeared to meet the approbation of almost the entire meeting, and accordingly it was carried, and the two gentlemen above-mentioned were requested to attend, Monday evening, May the 7th. This meeting I did not attend; but I am informed, it was also addressed by Mr. Fairfield and Doctor Stanton; and, I was further informed, that they so completely overcame the people, that they were ready to do anything they told them. The Constitution was read, and a society formed; and after some slight contention, it was thought best to appoint another meeting on the following Monday evening, for the purpose of electing their yearly officers. I was not present at that meeting, but was told it was anything but a pleasant one, although so large a number took part in those meetings, and seemed to be carried away with the idea of FOUR MILLION OF DOLLARS! which Mr. Fairfield said, would be sent in from the United States, and placed at the disposal of these organizations! Yet, there are many others in this city, who do oppose the entire scheme; but being in the minority, many of them did not attend those meetings. Now, I think, this Society will end as all such have done, in a disgrace to the colored people. I am of the opinion that the time has come that the colored people do not require in Canada these distinct societies of sympathy and begging, that have been entailed on them by their so-called friends. I think it is far better to leave them on a footing with others, and keep down those lines of distinction that are so industriously sought to be made, to separate the black from the white.

A. S.

LONDON, C. W., 5th June, 1855.

REMARKS:

Here is testimony as true as any that can be got in Canada, as to the Society "against" begging; but organized to get Mr. Fairfield and Stanton's FOUR MILLION OF DOLLARS! Was ever wickedness more apparent! We learn that our friends in Chatham think we have been unjust to Mr. Stanton, and our Chatham correspondent also. We do not intend to do injury to any man, knowingly; but if Mr. Stanton is found in bad company, he must take the consequences. He is not so stupid as not to understand Mr. Fairfield's infamous propositions, and to pretend to the people of London, the great things they had done elsewhere; but here is testimony from one of the most respectable citizens, as to their true aim. About Chatham, we have earned lots of enemies, by exposing them, of the very men, who, last year, were 'death to begging'—now heads turned clear around. Had a colored man made Fairfield's proposals, every one of them would have been for "serving" him as they proposed to do the slaveholder a few days ago; but a white face, however ignorant and impudent the owner, so he pretends to be a "friend," has especial terrors for these men. They can run away from a slaveholder, or "lick" him, if he attempts to retake them, but crouch, like whipped spaniels, when holders [illegible] wipe off the mon[illegible] free, at all hazards, [illegible] the disgrace of such doings as are recorded in the above letter—such cringing, clamorous deference to superior men, will cling to them and their children, like their shadow.

Many would suppose, from the commotion, that Mr. Fairfield & Co. were to be the final saviors of these interested in getting the four millions!—such "humbug!"—and that X. Y. Z., who told the story right out in meeting, and as true as preaching, was a desperado. Who will hold the key to the big money chest, we would like to know? Think fugitives of Chatham will get any nearer their proportion than those of other places,—Toronto, for instance,—do of the funds begged for them? Not they. We look by return of mail to hear that this pair of four million men, are to be sent to England, or through the States, as the fugitives' especial representatives. They have been commissioned already to publish their proceedings in the States papers.

As a clamour has been raised about 'X. Y. Z.,' and as Mr. A. Whipper has written to say that he is being censured by some as the author, we would say for the information of those opponents of free thought and speech,—those over cautious persons, who would do all the talking and writing themselves, that Mr. Whipper is not the man. 'X. Y. Z.' was in our office a few days ago, and as we look for him again, before his return to Chatham, we will ascertain positively if he has serious objections to being made the subject of an indignation meeting.

Dull Times—Son Shot by his Father—Weather—State of the Crops, &c.

DEAR FREEMAN:

It is very dull here just now, and as yet I have not had much success, though travelling constantly. There is a general complaint about scarcity of money; but many subscribers promise to pay arrears before I leave finally, and many to send pay to you direct. I hope to get many new names.

On Saturday evening, the 9th inst., quite an excitement was created by the treatment of a father to his son. Israel Williams—a man far advanced in years—while in the heat of passion, wilfully shot his son with a loaded musket—the load taking effect in the left side, below the ribs. Fears are entertained of his recovery; the whole load penetrating his side, which the physicians have not been able to extract. Young Williams was a promising young man, about 21 years of age, and much esteemed by all who knew him. The younger portion of the family, were compelled to flee to the barn to save themselves from injuries that might have been inflicted by the enraged father. Mr. Williams was one of the first settlers of Chatham, and lives on the Town Line, one mile south of the town. He has the appearance of an aged person, but yet quite active. He has since been arrested and imprisoned to await his trial.

Weather is very cool. Wheat looks well and bids fair for good crops. The Corn looks as well as can be expected. Visitors are coming into the Province daily. The Engines on the Underground Road seem to be in good running order, if we judge by the amount of passengers that arrive at the terminus.

In reading a communication, in the last Freeman, signed "J. N. S.," Brooklyn, N. Y., I was quite amused at the writer's remarks about the "National Convention," and also, "National Council," both of which he has been a member of, from the beginning, if I am not mistaken; though for some cause or other he chooses not to intimate that fact in the article to which I allude. Indeed, from reading it, one might infer that he had never been associated with either the "Convention" or "Council." True, he was not consulted relative to "the call" for the "National Convention," before his name appeared, signed to it, as was the fact, as far as I have been able to learn, with nearly all others whose names were signed. But as he has always acted with the "leaders," when permitted—even in the late "National Council," of which he has been speaking—therefore, it hardly seems fair, or charitable, for him now not to include himself in connection with those whom he so coolly designates as the "leaders," &c.—"unable to discuss a measure, unless in angry debate," though "they expect the people to" "invest their monies in undertakings not only impracticable, but of doubtful utility," &c. It seems that he has just learned that the "masses were never less subject to the control and influence of the leaders, than at the present time." This lesson he might have studied, as well as not, two years ago. Then, I presume, he would not have been "at a loss" at this late date, "as to what it is best to say about THEIR Council," &c.

Now, as I have never read in any of the reports of the doings of the Convention or Councils, "where J. N. S. has distinctly taken exceptions to the "impracticable" doings of the "leaders," though having taken an active part in their meetings, I confess to be somewhat "at a loss" to understand what method he will resort to, to convince the "people," and his colleagues, of his consistency? Surely he cannot plead ignorance in the matter; nor can he deny having acted and voted with the leaders in the late Council!—right "out in meeting." Before the air-castle commenced falling, was the proper time and place for him to have spoken, even if such a course had cost him his membership. Then he could have honorably vindicated the right, and justly and becomingly condemned the wrong doers.

Some gentlemen have spoken manly, in the Councils, and out of them, against the "fraud and arrogance" of certain leaders, and there is no mistake but what "the people" will give them credit for it.

The very best exposure, in my opinion, of the doings of the leaders, has been made by Mr. Wm. H. Day, of Cleveland, Ohio. He leaves no stone unturned; but with facts, good judgment, calmly, though unflinchingly, he lays the axe at the root of the tree," and he has cut to some purpose. I hope to see Mr. Day's argument in the Freeman, where J. N. S. will have the benefit of the perusal of it. No ordinary amount of sophistry, I think, can begin to move a single position taken by Mr. Day.

I am free to say now, as I have frequently said to many with whom I have conversed, on the subject, since the call first appeared: "I will believe that the chief originators of the call for the late convention, were actuated by pure and honest motives, as soon as it can be fairly proven that it was proper and just in them to publish to the world said call, signed and purporting to come from individuals who had been kept in total ignorance of all the particulars relating thereunto; but not before."

From the moment I first read the call, I looked for no other result than a useless waste of money and time; the building of a "castle in the air;" the passing of long resolutions, the design of which would be carried no further than the adjournment; lastly, the uprising of new elements of discord, &c.; all of which have been literally fulfilled. Hence, I do not wonder at the discovery made by J. N. S., that the "masses were never less subject to the control and influence of the leaders;" or "that the present state of things is anything but encouraging."

By the last No. of the Freeman, I learn that there has recently been an important alliance formed between "S." (one of the contributors) for the Freeman, and a Canadian gentleman, D. T. Williamson, Esq. By-the-way, for some weeks past, I had missed from the Editorial columns of the Freeman, the able and interesting articles on Canadian Emigraton, and other kindred topics, over "S.," and had been anxious to learn how that writer could excuse herself from occupying a post where her talent, energy, and good judgment had been so acceptable; indeed indispensable, in some respects. Is it possible, thought I, that "S." has left such a sphere of usefulness in the hour of great need, and retired to a place of repose in the West? That idea, I could scarcely entertain, because it detracted from her consistency. Now that the mystery has been solved, I have a new idea, not for myself, but for the old Maid—that is this: will it not occur to her that "S.'s" able articles, and replies to Mr. Gaines, and others, on Emigration, were written under the shining prospects of this alliance. On this matter, perhaps, judgment had as well be suspended for a time; in the meantime, let all keep a sharp look out, in the Freeman, and see if we can discover any signs of "S.'s" return thereto. I most heartily congratulate her!

Case of Rev. Mr. Pennington and the Sixth Avenue Railroad.

The following letter, relating to the alleged assault upon Rev. Mr. Pennington, a colored man, who was ejected from one of the Sixth Avenue railroad cars a few days ago, was received at the Mayor's office today. It gives an explanation of the affair:

OFFICE OF THE SIXTH AVENUE R. R. Co.,
May 25, 1855.

To the Hon. Fernando Wood, Mayor of New York:

SIR: In reply to your inquiry as to the removal of a colored man from car No. 28 of this road, I take the liberty, as secretary of the company, of explaining our true position. Some weeks ago, the Rev. Mr. Pennington, a colored clergyman, in a discourse, enforced upon his hearers their duty to assert by force their right to ride in all public conveyances, the duty of common carriers to allow them to do so, and the moral cowardice of failing to enforce their legal rights.

The next day, one Sidney McFarlan, a colored man, doing business in Church street, got upon one of our cars, and not being molested by that conductor, left it and got upon the one behind, from which he was ejected, (after repeated requests to leave,) as I presume, he expected and desised to be.

He obtained a warrant, and arrested both conductor and driver. After a patient investigation of the matter, Justice Brennan dismissed the complaint, McFarlan has since sued the company for an assault and battery, laying his venue in King's county, where a decision which he considers favorable to his views has heretofore been given. Since then, a number of others have endeavoured to force themselves into our cars, and finally, yesterday, the Rev. Mr. Pennington himself attempted to practise, as he had preached, the only thing in the whole matter which redounds to his credit.

As to the right of colored persons to be conveyed by common carriers, we have nothing to say. We have given them a right, and our stockholders pay for it. As to their right to ride in our cars, other than those specially assigned to them, we cannot admit it, and shall not until a legal decision to that effect virtually instructs us to take off our colored cars.

On the request of the trustees of the Colored Half-Orphan Asylum, near our depot, and of the more respectable portion of the colored people, this road set apart first one car, and finally a car every half hour, for their accomodation. We hold that this is doing more than is required for their convenience—far more than their census ratio entitles them to.

Of all the roads in the Union, we know of no other that does as much. Besides this, colored people are allowed to stand on the front platform of any of our cars. The old adage of 'giving an inch and taking an ell,' is verified by Rev. Mr. Pennington. He certainly must know that a great many people do object to riding next to a colored man, and many others to allow the ladies of their families to mingle with them in public conveyances. That even the metaphysical air of Heidelberg, where he took his degree, is not free from prejudice, if not those of colour, and that many, in this more practical country, who are willing to recognise a black, in the abstract, as a man and a brother, are not yet quite prepared to carry it into practice in our cars.

That even if he had a legal right, he would be wise to waive it, if he desires to live down a prejudice, than to force himself in where a large majority do not wish him, and where his feelings would be more wounded by success than failure. He will admit that before he was ejected yesterday, a gentleman of the highest respectability indignantly demanded the return of his fare, and refused to ride with him. That the conductor refused to take his fare, and repeatedly requested him to leave or go on the platform. That he refused and resisted, and conducted himself so violently as to cause his arrest by a policeman of his own accord, and his severe censure by Justice Connolly for a breach of the peace. That he lives on the line of the road, and knows its regulations.

I submit to your honor that we are subjects for the protection of the authorities. That our business is to carry passengers, and that we have nothing to do with the colour of their skins, only with the colour of their money, and the comfort and convenience of all. I write as the officer of the Company. Personally, I may say, in conclusion, that my present experience is almost enoughf to change any Free Soil proclivities into a northern man with southern principles.

Very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
T. BAILEY MYERS, Sec.

Those who can see much to commend in the "Free Soil proclivities of T. Bailey Myers, must be thankful for small favors.

Arrival of the "Atlantic."

NEW YORK, 13th June.

The Atlantic arrived here this morning.

News most important since the battle of the "Alma." Allies gained three victories. Desperate engagements on nights of 22d and 23d, before Sebastopol. French took and retained an important position of defence. 8000, killed and wounded.

Allies made rapid advances, seized and retained the Russians lines on the Tchernaya, the Russians retiring to the hills.

Allies took Kertsch, and took command of the sea of Azoff.

France and England decline further conference at Vienna. Hopes of peace prevail.

THE WAR.

The news is of the utmost importance and exciting character, conveying, as it does, three distinct successes by the allies. By the last arrival we have a brief account that the French, had driven the Russians from a strong position of defence before Sebastopol. This occurred during the nights of the 22d and 23d, and was a most sanguinary affair, the place being defended by nearly the whole garrison. The losses on both sides in killed and wounded is set down at 8000. Gen. Pelissier says the Russian loss was enormous,' and that of his own troops considerable, but much less. The French retained their position.

Prince Gortschakoff's account is thus—Yesterday evening, 17 battalions of the French, with reserves, attacked our trench of counter approach, commenced the day before, in front of Bastions Nos. 5 and 6. The combat was sanguinary and lasted during the whole night. Our 12 battalions lost nearly 2,500 men in driving back the enemy.

Pelissier telegraphs under date of 25th, 1 p. m:—To-day we have occupied the line Tchernaya.—The enemy, who were not in force, offered little resistance and retreated into the hills. We have definitely established ourselves in the works carried during the nights of the 22nd & 23rd. An armistice was agreed on for burying the dead, and we were enabled to form an estimate of the enemy's losses; they must be about five or six thousand killed and wounded.

MAY 26.—The enemy has made no demonstration either in front of the place or against our lines on the Tchernaya. The works of fortification at Kamroch are progressing. The sanitary condition of the army continues good.

MAY 27, 9 A.M.—The expedition to Kertsch and Yenikale has been attended with complete success. The enemy fled at the approach of the Allies. They blew up their power magazines, destroyed their batteries, and burned their steamers.

The Sea of Azoff is occupied by the allied squadron.

It is supposed in Paris that Pelissier had attacked and routed Liprandi's forces.

Canrobert was reported wounded, and another General killed. This rumour was regarded as very doubtful.

Lord Raglan telegraphs as follows:—"May 27th.—We are masters of the Sea of Azoff, without any casualties. The troops landed at Kertsch on her Majesty's birthday (24th,) and the enemy fled, blowing up their fortifications on both sides of the strait, and destroying their steamers. Some vessels and fifty guns have fallen into the hands of the Allies."

Lord Raglan further telegraphs that, on 25th, General Sir George Brown had reached Yenikale, having the previous day destroyed a foundry near Kertsch, where shot and shell and Minie balls were manufactured.

In advance, the French were on the right, the English on the left, and the Turks in reserve.

A despatch from Raglan, of 30th, says—"Letters from General Brown and Admiral Lyons, of the 29th, announce the destruction by the enemy of four Russian war-steamers, and large depots of corn."

The Allies' ships have succeeded in blowing up a magazine at Arabat, and destroying about 100 merchant vessels.

Only one Russian war-steamer remained in the Sea of Azoff.

Advices from Sir George Brown, of 28th, state that the troops continued healthy.

Five vessels, laden with corn, had run into Kertsch, not knowing the place was taken, and were captured.

The number of guns found by the Allies exceeded 100.

A French account says, the Russians burned thirty transports, as well as their four steamships, and destroyed 34,000 sacks of corn, 160,000 sacks of oats, and 100,000 sacks of flour.

Fourteen allied steamers entered Azoff.

Reinforcements were daily arriving at Constantinople.

The occupation of Galatz, and an attack on Ismael and Reni, were confidently spoken of.

The garrison of Sebastopol drew most of their supplies from Kertscha. Its capture, therefore, will exercise a speedy influence on the siege.

Fifty cases, and twenty deaths, of cholera, were reported among the British forces, and some cases among the French before Sebastopol.

The Sardinian contingent had been landed in splendid condition, and fully supplied with all the materials of war.

Heat had succeeded the rain.

Large convoys had entered Sebastopol from the north side, and the Russians were working vigorously on that side erecting earthworks &c.

The Allies had completed their fourth parallel, and the British were moving all their heavy mortars into the advanced parallel.

Two deserters from Sebastopol reported garrison very strong.

The hot weather was causing sickness.

The Baltic.

It was reported at Dantzic on the 23rd, that the division of Russian gunboats stationed at Sveaborg have made a movement towards the opposite coast of the Gulf in the direction of Riga.

The Russians are making a land communication at Torres, at the extremity of the Gulf of Bothnia.

The French squadron under the command of Admiral Renaud sailed for Kiel on the 22nd to join the English fleet, which was last reported beyond Nargen.

Asia.

Letters from Erzeroum report that Gen. Williams was busy fortifying the city with earthworks.

Kurdistan is not yet quiet.

The Russians had recently manifested some intention of attacking Kars.

Miscellaneous.

The Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs had issued a circular respecting a blockade of the Finland ports, in which he says that England has departed from the principle that the flag covers the cargo; and he warns neutral vessels of the circumstance.

The expected resumption of the Vienna Conference had not taken place, and it was doubtfully reported that the new Austrian proposition were peremptorily negatived by England and France

Austrian negotiation is more active than ever, with the view of obtaining for the Cabinet of Vienna a supremacy in Germany.

Count Buol, in a circular to the Austrian representatives at the German Courts, regards the publication of the protocols of the Vienna Conference by the British Government as premature, in consideration that the negotiations for peace could not be regarded as terminated.

Said Pacha, Viceroy of Egypt, has given orders for the construction of a railroad across the Isthmus of Suez, [84 miles].

The contract is said to have been entered into for a telegraph from Constantinople to Egypt.

Official accounts state that in the earthquakes at Broussa 445 lives were lost in the first and 204 in the second shock.

Menschikoff has returned to St. Petersburgh, and was well received by the Emperor.

Seven hundred and forty-six Russians were prisoners in the hands of the English, while the former had but one hundred and eight privates and ten officers belonging to the English. No returns of the French.

A conspiracy to assassinate General Kelesig, Greek Minister of War, had been discovered at Athens, and some arrests had been made.

Miss Nightingale had been laid up with fever, but was recovering.

Great Britain.

Parliament has not been in session during the week.

Addresses had been voted by various departments of working men to Mr Layard.

The British Shipping returns for April continue to exhibit considerable decrease in the employment of tonnage.

An agitation had arisen for the introduction of the Maine Law into Britain, but without the remotest present chance of success.

Lord Strangeford and Charles Manners were dead, both advanced in years.

France.

The Exposition was beginning to attract more attention, still it fell far short of expectations. The first three days attracted 30,000 visitors.

The King of Portugal was in Paris.

Marshal Harispo died at Bayonne.

Holland.

A convention of reciporocity in the coasting trade between the Dutch Government and Prussia has been completed.

Italy.

The new Sardinian Ministry has at length been recomposed.

The eruption of Mount Vesuvius had subsided.

Spain.

The insurgents at Caspi and Alcanitse had been defeated; two leaders and a priest were shot.

The Provinces were tranquil.

India and China

Details of the Oriental news had reached England.

Intelligence from Burmah was unfavourble to the prospects of peace.

Nothing further from Persia. Trade had undergone a material improvement at Shanghai. From the 9th February all was quiet, the troops having been withdrawn towards Canton. In the interior, matters had assumed an unfavorable change, and the insurgents were making such advances as led to the fear that they might stop the export trade at Shanghai.

The insurgents along the coast had been attacking foreign flags. A British expedition had consequently destroyed twenty junks with most of their crews, and the remainder were killed on shore.

A famine threatens the people of Canton, and food riots were apprehended.

A British fleet of eight vessels was to rendezvous at Japan, and afterwards to proceed to the Russian settlements in the north.

The Very Latest from Europe.

BY TELEGRAPH FROM LONDON TO LIVERPOOL.

LONDON, SATURDAY, A.M., JUNE 2.

MEMEL, May 26.—When the war steamer "Diver" was sent into the Baltic ports to apprise the vessels lying there of the blockade, she found among others the American ship, Samuel Appleton, of Boston, which she also served with a warning to clear out within six days. A day or two afterwards, being out cruising, fell in with the Appleton, and a officer was sent on board to examine her papers, they were found perfectly in order, whereupon the officer demanded to see the bills of lading. The American Captain objected to this, and began to make difficulties, which excited the suspicions of the British officer, so he insisted on their production. It was at length complied with, when it appeared that the Appleton had just landed at a Baltic port. 50,000 rifles, 10,000 revolvers, besides about 800 bales of Cotton, as the ostensible part of her cargo. The ship was carefully overhauled but nothing contraband of war was found on board. The Appleton entered the Sound, March 15th, and arrived at Baticsh port April 17th.

The Crimea.

At an assembly of general officers, summoned for the purpose, Gen. Canrobert communicated to them with noble simplicity the change in the command which was about to take place, and transferred his command to Gen. Pelissier. Canrobert afterwards assumed the command of his division.

The Vienna papers publish a Consular despatch from Varna, according to which the number of allied troops landed at Kertch, under Gen. Brown, was 70,000.

The advance on Tchernaya, was effected on the same day with 35,000, men. A French despatch also from Varna states, that the allies are in possession of the Tchernaya on the right bank of the river, and that two Russian batteries and several battalions detached from the north of Sebastopol, were advanced to support the retiring force.

Provincial.

Testimonial to Mr. Capreol.

"Better late than never." We have seen with great satisfaction the proceedings with reference to the above subject. Mr. Capreol deserves well of Toronto, and of Canada! We have before stated our conviction that a Canadian Railway would not have existed yet but for his untiring and steady devotion to its progress and accomplishment.

His success and the ultimate though tardy recognition, not reward, of his services should be an encouragement to others to imitate and carry out works of public utility. Five-and-twenty men acting with equal decision and unity of purpose would confer incalculable advantage upon this neglected city!

What we hope in this matter is that the handsome subscription made may not be rendered comparatively valueless by any such nonsence as a service of plate!

One such article to be selectid by himself and kept for ever in the family as an heir-loom would be proper, an act as an encouragement to subsequent generations.

All that we can offer to our friend and neighbour is that of which all people are very prodigal——advice. We exhort him so far to forget Canada as to go home and visit the "old rooftree," and stay twelvemonths, and then return to us with renewed health and spirits to suggest and carry out projects for the public benefit.

The handsome Donation of £250 from the Canada Company does equal honour to that Society and Mr. Capreol.—Anglo Canadin.

FIRES.—At about two o'clock on Wednesday morning, a fire broke out in the premises occupied by Mr. J. Bradshaw, next to the corner of Yonge and Edward streets, as a grocery, &c.—The building, with its stock, which was small, was consumed, and his residence next door considerably injured. He is insured to the full amount of his loss. The buildings were the property of Mr. Henry Moore, and are not insured.

About the same time, a fire occurred in the work-room connected with the store of Messrs. D. & J. Merrick, opposite the St. Lawrence Hall, and burned considerable stock. The building was not much injured, and we are glad to learn that the firm was fully insured.—Globe, June 14.

CONSPIRACY IN THE PENITENTIARY.—The Port Hope Guide says:—We learned yesterday from a reliable source that a fearful and deep laid conspiracy has been discovered in the Provincial Penitentiary. One of the convicts, a Roman Catholic, made known the plot to his priest, who laid the matter before the Warden. A general search ensued, when about one hundred and fifty of the convicts were found armed with deadly weapons. It was their intention when they were all assembled after the six o'clock bell rang in the evening, to fall upon their keepers, murder them, and then effect their escape. We are not acquainted with the details of the affair, but give the information as we received it.—Patriot, June 12.

MURDER.—An attrocious murder was committed about a week ago, in East Flamboro.' two laborers, named Jas. O'Donnell and John Hulligan, having applied for work to Mr. R. Bardwell, the foreman of a quarry in connexion with the Hamilton and Toronto Railway; he told them quietly that he had no need for them, but might employ them soon. Hulligan then took him by the vest, in a seemingly jocular manner, when O'Donnell, standing behind, struck him with a pick-axe on the back of the head, and felled him to the ground insensible. Early next morning he died. There was no provocation given, nor any cause been assigned for the murderous assault. The coroner's inquest returned a verdict of wilful murder against the two men, who have escaped, but for whose arrest £100 reward is offered. The following is the description of the murderers:—James O'Donnell is about 25 years old, about 5 feet 11 inches high, slim built, smart and active, dark and sallow complexion, no whiskers, generally dressed well for a laborer, and wore, when last seen, Canadian grey pants, black rowdy hat, and had a carpet bag. John Hulligan is about the same age, 5 feet 11 inches in height, slim built, full round face, dark curley hair and whiskers, and had on when last seen dark pants, black hat, and had a carpet bag. They were both from the county of Tipperary, Ireland.—Anglo Canadian.

ATTEMPT AT SUICIDE.—A servant in the employ of Hiram Gillett, of Port Hope, attempted suicide last Sunday, by cutting her throat. Religious despondency was assigned as the cause of the rash act. Her wounds have been attended to, and she is progressing favorably.

CANADIAN VOLUNTEERS FOR THE CRIMEA.—The Albany Argus of Tuesday says: "The train from Suspension Bridge, which arrived here at a late hour on Monday night, brought a company of volunteer Canadian riflemen, armed and equipped, bound for the Crimea. They left yesterday morning, via Western Railroad, for Boston, where they will to-day ship on board a packet for Constantinople. The company numbers some sixty members, young, athletic, hardy sons of Canada, who state that they "shall not come back until they lick the Russians."

AN AFFECTING INCIDENT.—A seaman in the fleet before Sebastopol was lately ordered on shore to assist in burying the dead. Among the slain he found three of his brothers.

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR BOYS.—A boy in in one of our London Ragged-schools, having shown a great taste for acquiring languages, has been sent out as an interpreter to Balaklava, and frequently has had the honor of of dining with Lord Raglan.—The Signs of the Times.

OBITUARY.

DIED,—In this City, on Saturday, June 3rd, Mr. Augustin Bourgoin, aged 72 years and 11 months. Mr. Bourgoin was a native of Porte de Paix, Hayti, West Indies, but left with his family, during the Revolution, and settled in Baltimore, Maryland, U. S., where he resided 51 years, and where he was widely known as an humble Christian and respectable citizen. There he had to perform the mournful duty of consigning to their last resting place a father, sisters, and a wife and several children. He came to this city a few months since, and resided with his-son-in-law, Mr A. T. Augusta, until called in peace to his final resting place.

Extraordinary Premiums to Agents

For procuring Subscribers for

TICKETS AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,
IN PERHAM'S GREAT
100,000 GIFT ENTERPRISE!

The distribution of the Gifts being definitely fixed for JULY 5, 1855.

Any person sending $10 may deduct 10 per cent. or will receive 11 Tickets.

Each person sending $100 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Mammoth Gold Pen and Case, valued at $10.

Each person sending $200 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be

Presented with a Silver Watch, valued at $25.

Each person sending $300 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Gold Watch, valued at $50.

The person who shall send, before the 5th of July, the largest amount above $500, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Piano, valued at $200.

I have been induced to make the above liberal offers in order to remove a settled objection in the minds of your committee, to having the distribution take place while there remain in my hands tickets unsold, and for which cause they seem fit to defer the partition of the gifts, which was fixed for the 27th inst., to the 5th of July, as will be seen by reference to their proceedings, published below. I assure you that the postponement is as vexatious to me as it is to those who have purchased tickets. I therefore hope that each and every one now interested, will co-operate with me in the effort to dispose of the few thousand tickets remaining unsold, and thus advance the interests of the whole body of shareholders.

Respectfully yours,
J. PERHAM.

TO THE PATRONS OF
Perham's Third Gift Enterprise.

At a meeting of the Committee of Shareholders of Perham's Gift Enterprise, held at the Academy Hall, Broadway, on Wednesday Evening, April 18th, 1855, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted and ordered to be printed:—

Whereas, In view of the fact that several enterprises have been started and carried on with a seeming positive purpose of defrauding those who could be persuaded to purchase tickets therein; and such fraudulent proceedings have exerted an injurious influence in the sale of tickets in the enterprise of Mr. Perham; and whereas, it is deemed essential that all the tickets should be disposed of before the distribution takes place, be it therefore

Resolved, That in order to allow time for that purpose, the distribution be postponed until the 5th of July, at such place as may hereafter be determined on.

Resolved, That the committee have undiminished confidence in the integrity of Mr. Perham, and in his disposition to conform to all his published promises to his patrons.

ROBT. BEATTY, JR,
Chairman.

REMEMBER!

The Tickets are only $1 Each,

And each Ticket admits Four Persons to Perham's Burlesque Opera, 663 Broadway, New York,

PERHAM'S GIFT ENTERPRISE.

The committee appointed by the Shareholders in this affair, to distribute the 100,000 Gifts amongst the ticket holders, have deferred the distribution until the 5th of July, on account of there remaining unsold some few thousands of tickets. Mr. Perham, ever anxious to meet the views of his patrons, offers extraordinary inducements to Agents to engage in the sale of the remaining tickets, so that there may be no mere delays, which are unquestionably as vexatious to him as to those who have purchased tickets in his enterprise. We commend the reading of his advertisement to our patrons, and hope that each and all will lend a helping hand to bring the matter to an early and satisfactory consummation.

O'Neil, D. Kohoe, Jas. Stock, P. Foy, W. J. Macdonald, John Shea, M. Macnamara, S. G. Lynn, J. Wallis, Chas. Robertson, Augus Macdonell, J. P. DeLaHaye.

Trustees and Directors

Elected to serve during the present year:—

W. J. MACDONELL,—PRESIDENT,
P. J. O'NEILL,—VICE-PRESIDENT,
MESSRS. S. G. LYNN, P. FOY, & DR. HAYES,
BANKERS—BANK OF UPPER CANADA,
SOLICITOR—JAS. HALLINAN, Esq.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations, which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR.)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16*TH VIC. CAP.* 85. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. All packages, containing Soap, Candles, Pipes, Nails, Chains, Paints, Spices, Nuts, Vermiceli, Macaroni, Glass Tin, Canada Plates, Tins, Trunks and Jars containing Merchandise, and all other packages in which the goods are usually exposed for sale, or which necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold. And that the following Packages are to be exempt from payment of Duty, viz: Bales, Trusses, Cases covering Casks of Wines or Brandy in Wood, Cases and Casks containing Dry Goods, Hardware or Cutlery, Crates and Casks containing Glassware and Earthenware, Cases containing Bottled Wine or Bottled Spirits, and all other packages in which the goods are not usually exposed for sale, or which do not necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold.

By Command,

F. HINCKS, Inspector Gen.

IV. And be it enacted, That spirits and strong waters having the flavour of any kind of spirits or strong waters subject to higher duty than that imposed on Whiskey, shall be liable to the duty, imposed on the kind of spirits or strong waters of which they have the flavor as aforesaid, from whatever substance they may be distilled or prepared; but nothing in this Section shall be constructed as a declaration that spirits and Strong waters so flavored, were or were not before the passing of this Act subject to the duty imposed on those of which they have the flavor.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the American Tract Society," has this sentence.—'For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings.

BY S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the greography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures, and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigaton; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one impeial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1851.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

WILLIAM PERSONS.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

JOHN ALEXANDER.

BUFFALO, Feb. 21st 1853.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

THE

Universal Phonographer,

ORGAN OF THE

American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,

Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonotypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a Journal of THIRTY-two pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing, Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic Intelligence, Notices to Correspondents, Important Items of News, Biographies of Phonographers, "Gems of Expression," "Glances," Sketches, Eloquent Extracts, etc., etc., in four different methods of representing our language; Romantic Print, Phonetic Print, Phonetic Long-hand, and Phonetic Short-hand (in both of its styles). And all for ONE DOLLAR. Subscriptions should be prepaid and addressed thus: "ANDREW J. GRAHAM, Phonetic Depot, 358, Bleecker Street, New York."

☞ Any person desiring to become practically acquainted with the different departments of the Writing and Printing Reform, cannot better attain his or her wish than by sending the publisher $1 50 (the fifty cents in stamps), for which there will be furnished the necessary instruction book (pre-paid), and the Universal Phonographer for one year.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

CANADA FARMER,

A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

CONSTITUTION

OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to infuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly Limited and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle here, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's and from of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America, by all legitimate means; and 4th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 5th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies', Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

Information Wanted

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. If she will call on or communicate by letter with Robert Phillips, Centre St., Toronto, she will hear news of much importance relating to her property.

Poetry.

From the National Era.

THE LOFTY AND LOWLY.

The loftiest things on earth are linked
To the lowliest underneath them lying;
And human might is always brinked
By feeble birth and feebler dying;
Ay, birth and dying.

'Tis dust that clogs the spirit's ken,
And intercepts its heavenward flying;
And holiest, happiest thoughts of men,
Still throb to life through sin and sighing.
Ay, sin and sighing.

Bound each to each, by common blood,
The nations are a household scattered,
Though some sit clothed in purple garb,
And others lie all shorn and shattered;
Ay, shorn and shattered.

Yet all have loved, as all have sinned;
To one great God are all appealing;
And so mankind are so man-kinned
By blood and need, if not by feeling;
Alas, the feeling!

The Lazarus of nations sits,
All covered o'er with wounds and bruises,
At Dives's door, and, weeping, waits
The boon his haughty lord refuses;
And still refuses.

But, e'er with peril, pride ignores
A brother in his low condition;
Fraternal bonds, forgot on earth,
Will meet elsewhere their recognition;
Such recognition!

To work His purpose, God makes still
The weakly one His strongest lever;
Men strive to govern, but His will,
To its fulfilment, slow, but ever,
Ay, slow, but ever,

Is working; and while men make haste
To bind, to blot, to crush, to sever,
The mighty God, who takes no rest,
Their schemes o'erruling, thwarts forever—
Oh, yes, forever!

From Punch.

The Protocol of Private Life.

The unfortunate differences which have arisen between various members of the Tomkins family were taken into consideration at the recent Conference in Finsbury. The original dispute arose in the summer of 1854, about eleven months after the marriage of Mr. Thomas Tomkins with Miss Maria, the beautiful and amiable daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chowderby, of the City Road. Mr. Chowderby, a year before a coal-agent in apparantly affluent circumstances, became in June, 1754, from circumstances over which he had no control, unable to meet his financial engagements.

Previous recourse (especially upon an occasion when an infuriate milkman urged his demand with some precipitancy) had been had to the Loan system, and Mr. Tomkins, who is engaged in the pickle trade, had discounted a series of (dishonourable) bills for his father-in-law. Deeming it necessary to restrict his cash operations, Mr. Tomkins had lately declined this course; and to his son-in-law refused him money, Mr. Chowderby, with some plausibility, attributes his being without any. Differences arose, which were rather suspended than settled by a visit which, at Maria Tomkins's desire, her husband requested from Mrs. Chowderby.

It is here necessary to mention that, about December last, a baby was born to Mr. and Mrs. Tomkins. Mrs. Chowderby accepted the invitation, bringing with her two younger brothers of Maria, and they remained as guests until Easter, at which period the unsolicited supretendence of the elder lady with the management of the infant, the continual disarrangement of the pickle pots by the younger Chowderbys, the incessant demands of the elder Chowderbys, for money, and a final proposition that the whole Chowderby family should come and live with the Tomkins's brought matters to a crisis, which terminated in the expulsion of the Chowderbys, and a total estrangement.

Mr. Tomkins felt no discontent at this; but his wife and various members of the family considered it objectionable, it was agreed that a conference should be held at Miss Tiddles's (a maiden aunt of Mr. Tomkins,) in order to endeavour to arrange matters.

The conference took place at the above locality on Wednesday afternoon. Everybody attended on his and her own behalf. There were present, therefore, Mr. Silas Chowderby, Miss Tiddles, Mrs. S. Chowderby, Mr. T. Tomkins, Maria Tomkins, Baby Tomkins (provisionally registered Thos. Augustus Pickles,) Sarah Carter (nurse of the latter,) Master Peter Chowderby, Master Jack Chowderby, Miss Louisa Tomkins (Mr. T. T.'s sister,) and Mr. Frederic Binkle (keeping company with the latter.)

Miss Tiddles could not understand why relatives could not live in peace and harmony. She hated to see family disturbances, and thought the shortest way was to forget and forgive, and try to bear with one another better for the future. She would express no opinion on any subject, except that Thomas Augustus Pickles was the loveliest little tickswicksy that ever was, so he was, and a duck of diamonds, and a treasure of the Indian seas, and the gold mines of America, chick, chick, chick, chick, chick.

The initiative was then, at her own desire, conceded to Mrs. Chowderby, who expressed a conviction that things had come to a pretty pass when a child forgot her duty to the mother that had weaned her; that the meanness of Mr. Tomkins did not surprise her, for it was well known that he came of a mean stock; but that Maria should go against her was indeed a blow, which, when she was laid in silent extramural cemetery, that undutiful girl would remember in sacking and hashes. To suppose that a woman at her time of life did not understand babies better than a chit was ridiculous, but this was only a pretence for Mister Tomkins to get rid of his duty to his wife's parents.

They happened not to be so well off in worldly things as he was, perhaps because they had not stooped to the same low means of turning cash—some people, respectable people, too, had spoken of half pennies boiled in pickles to give them a colour, but that was neither here nor there. Mr. Tomkins ought to be ashamed of himself, and as for his wife —(here Mrs. Chowderby wept)

Sarah Carter had no right to speak, being only a poor servant; but sooner than see that blessed baby (article produced) physicked with the messes Mrs. Chowderby guv it when it's mamma's back was turned, she would break stones on the high rodes.

Mrs. Chowderby insisted on that slut's withdrawal from the conference; but, after some discussion, this proposal was overruled.

Mr. Tomkins had deuced little to say. He had married Maria, and not the whole family; but he was a good natured fellow, and so long as her relations behaved with any sort of decency, he had been glad to do his best for them. But there was such a thing as cutting it too f——(here Mrs. Tomkins gently suggested that her husband should vary his illustrations.) Well, he meant as riding a willing horse to death. He appealed to Maria if he had not been a kind husband to her, in spite of her relatives. (Mrs. Tomkins here threw herself on his bosom and sobbed.)

Mr. Cowderby said that it was keener than a toothache to have a thankless serpant instead of a child.

Mr. Tomkins was willing to admit that proposition in all its fullness, but did not see the applicability.

Miss Louisa Tomkins was sure that her brother would do everything that was right, and suggested that he should give them a day on the water, and a dinner at Richmond, and everybody be friends.

Mr. Frederic Binkle cordially concurred in the last suggestion; and if the word champagne were not deemed inadmissable, he would venture to offer, on his own account, that addition to the proposed festivity. (Miss L. Tomkins touched his hand, and said "Duck.")

Mr. Chowderby regarded all that as trash. If Mr. Tomkins would give him the money such a piece of foolery would cost, it would enable him to remove his silver tea-pot from the house of a supposed relative, where, to the infinite disgrace of the family, it had long been deposited.

Masters Peter and Jack Chowderby expressed an opinion that the party would be more jolly, and bother the old tea-pot; besides, papa never took tea, but gin-and-water. (The extrusion of these members of the Conference occupied the next half minute.)

Mrs. Maria Tomkins cried for some time, and then stated, that except her husband, her blessed baby was the only comfort she had on earth. Her papa and mamma were very unkind, she was sure, and Thomas had a great deal to complain of. She had tried to make peace, but she hoped she knew her duty as a wife.

Baby Tomkins (hearing his mammas voice) signified that she owed a duty as a mother, which he called upon her to perform without delay. (The proceedings became inaudible until his demand was complied with.)

Mrs. Chowderby hoped that what the unmarried young lady had seen and heard that day would be a warning to her in case she ever had the misfortune of having children. No girl could have been better brought up than Maria, and now let them look at her.

Mrs. Tomkins begged, laughing, that they would do nothing of the kind.

Mr. Chowderby conceived that if they were going to have nothing but nonsense, they had better go. He was a man of business, and would make a business-like proposition. Would Tomkins pay all his debts, and advance him £100 to buy him a milk-walk, taking the advance out—for he was a man of business—in milk on week days and cream on Sundays?

Mr. Tomkins, in justice to his adored wife, to that innocent babe, and to all—well, never mind that—must decline doing anything of the sort. But a £20 note was heartily at Mr. Chowderby's service, and there it was.

Mr. Chowderby would accept it but without prejudice to his other claims.

Mrs. Chowderby would forgive her Maria, if Maria could forgive herself.

Mrs. Tomkins signified that she was decidedly equal to this latter conciliatory effort, there was much mutual embracing, and tea at the expense of Miss Tiddles.

Misapprehension.—We recollect once being much amused at the relation of the following anecdote, from the lips of a very amiable, and withal a modest widow lady of New Jersey: Soon after her husband paid the debt of nature, leaving her sole legatee, a claim was brought against the estate by his brother, and a process was served upon her by the sheriff of the county, who happened to be a widower, of middle age. Being unused, at that time, to the forms of law, though in the protracted law suit that followed, she had ample opportunity of acquiring experience, she was much alarmed, and meeting, just after the departure of the sheriff, with a female friend, she exclaimed, with much agitation, "What do you think? Sheriff Perine has been after me!" "Well," said the considerate lady, with perfect coolness, "he is a very fine man." "But he says he has an attachment for me," replied the widow. "Well, I have long suspected he was attached to you, my dear." "But you don't understand—he says I must go to court." "Oh, that's quite another affair, my child; don't you go so far as that; it is his place to come and court you."

Courtship among the Pawnees.

When the lover wishes to break the ice, he comes to her father's tent, uninvited, and sits on the corner of the mat for a considerable time, and then goes away without speaking. This is a preliminary step, answering, perhaps to the first gentle pressure of the hand—the first blushing hesitation in address—the first mutual glance of understanding. After a few days the young man reutrns, wearing his buffalo robe with the hair outward, and again sits down silent in the corner of the tent. This is a proposal—a regular "popping the question." If the father is determined to reject him, nothing is placed for him to sit on, and no meat is offered; but if he approve of the match, these rights of hospitality are observed. Feasts are then given by the respective parties, in order to obtain the consent of their relatives. If both feasts terminate favourably in this respect, the young man presents himself once more before his bride, at the door of her tent, and then turns round and walks slowly off towards his own—she raises and follows him—the marriage is then complete. If she remain sitting it is a sign that her family decline the match. All this is done without a word passing between the intended bride and the husband that is to be. But the most extraordinary part of the affair, is that having married an elder sister, he has the right to marry all the younger ones, as they successively attain the age of womanhood. The author adds: "I have seen chiefs who have in this manner married a whole family; the eldest wife being the greatest drudge, and the youngest being generally the favourite Sultana, and consequently doing the least."—Charles Augustus Murray.

Phrenology in the Pulpit.

TESTIMONY OF REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER.

It is very hard for a minister of the gospel, standing before a promiscuous audience, to deal with the facts of their minds, and their inward lives. It is a melancholy fact, that men know less about that which is the very element of their being, than about anything else in the world. I suppose if I were to go among the intelligent men in my congregation, I could get every variety of information on subjects connected with the daily business affairs of life—upon questions of political economy, upon various questions of commerce, facts concerning the structure of ships, steam-engines—I could collect any amount of information on all these, and a thousand other kindred subjects. But when I ask them what is inside of themselves, they can tell me of a great manufactory, and explain to me the operation and of all the machinery in it; but upon the question of the machinery of their own minds, they cannot say a word. In regard to commercial matters, they know all about them; they have examined them, they have compared their ideas on these subjects, and have classified them. They believe themselves to be immortal creatures, that they have throbbing within them a soul that shall live as long as God himself shall live; yet, when I ask them any questions in regard to their inward nature, their only reply is, "I don't know, I don't know." They do not know what their reason is; they do not know what is the nature of their moral powers; they do not definitely understand the nature or operation of any one faculty of their minds!

They understand the nature of the soil of the earth; they know what it is capable of producing; they know the use of the plough, and all the implements of agriculture; they know what to do with a plant that is not thriving, they are skilful to impart to it fresh life, and make it flourish. But if any plant that ought to grow in the mind is stunted and does not thrive, they cannot tell how to make that grow. They don't know what to do to bring it forth.

It is difficult for a minister of the gospel to set forth the truth intelligibly in respect to its relation to the human mind. I think it is partly because men have not been curious in respect to themselves, and partly on account of the many bewildering systems of mental philosophy that are in vogue in our day. For if there were none of these systems except the old schools of metaphysical philosophy, I would defy any man to obtain by means of them any clear idea about the soul, for of best they are of but little more value than so many cobwebs. Men may study them, if they have a taste for them; if a man loves logic and discussion, let him take one of the old mataphysical mental philosophies, and he will have means of busying his mind until he grows tired of such business. But if a man wishes to know practically what he is made up of, if a man wishes a knowledge of human nature for definite practical purposes, there is no system which will aid him in acquiring that knowledge like the system of Phrenology; not interpreted too narrowly or technically, but in its relations to physiology and the structure of the whole body. And I may say here what I have never said before in the pulpit, that the views of the human mind as they are revealed by Phrenology, are those views which have underlayed my whole ministry; and if I have had any success in bringing the truths of the gospel to bear practically upon the minds of men, any success in the vigorous application of truths to the wants of the human soul, where they are most needed, I owe it to the clearness which I have gained from this science. And I could not ask for the members of my family, nor of a church, any better preparation for religious indoctrination, than to put them in possession of such a practical knowledge of the human soul as is given by Phrenology.

I have avoided the use of the nomenclature of Phrenology in the pulpit as far as possible, because I did not wish to seem to be a mere teacher of a philosophical system, while I was a minister of the truth as it is in Christ; but I have now been so long with you, that I am justified in making this statement.

I may say, in regard to the objections sometimes urged against Phrenology, its tendency to materialism and fatalism, that the same objections may be made to any other system of mental philosophy. I do not think that such objections belong to Phrenology any more than to any other system of intellectual science which you can possibly construct. Men's mere logical and speculative reason will always strand them upon the sands of fatalism or materialism; and it is the practical sense, the conscientiousness of actual liberty, that redeems us from a belief of the one or the other. Such doctrines dwell in the head, but never in the hands.

Hints for Summer.

We give the following condensation of an interesting article in Buchanan's "Journal of Man."

The hygiene of summer differs materially from that of winter. In winter the waste of material is great, and nourishing food necessary; in summer stimulus is less needed, but larger quantities of fluid are required. Cold exerts an antiseptic influence, while warmth promotes putrefaction. Care should be taken, in summer, to remove decaying vegetable and animal matter. Iron gutters should be provided, into which the filth might run, and from which every shower would thoroughly remove it. As a means of purification, to guard against the feverish attacks of summer, lime is not to be relied on, having little more antiseptic power than common clay. Chloride of lime has some value, but is too expensive. The best absorbent of noxious gases is charcoal, fresh from the kiln. The carcasses of domestic animals will not contaminate the atmosphere, if covered with a layer of charcoal. To purify air in unwholesome apartments, burn grains of coffee in a red-hot shovel, and allow the fumes to disseminate through the appartments. If the doors or windows can be opened, always do so; if not, ventilation may be caused by kindling a blaze in the fireplace or flue, thus creating an ascending current. A slow ventilation may be produced by placing a lighted lamp or candle in the fireplace. The consumption of animal food in summer should be diminished, and ripe fruits liberally partaken of. Salt, vinegar and pepper, which make our best antiseptics for the preservation of oysters, beef, ham, &c., are equally applicable to animal food when taken into our bodies. Salt materially enriches the blood, and promotes the general vigor of the constitution. If its consumption were diminished, there would be a great increase of mortality from consumption and fever. In malarious districts, salt meat and coffee are considered more wholesome than fresh meat and milk. The proper use of salt, vinegar and pepper would entirely prevent or cure the majority of the attacks of diarrhœa and cholera. A teaspoonful of salt, another of black pepper, with a tablespoonful of vinegar, diluted to suit the taste, is an almost infallible remedy in cases of deranged or inactive digestive organs. The composition of the Neutralizing Cordial, so often prescribed by Eclectic physicians for irritations and disorders of the bowels, is as follows: Equal parts of rhubarb, saleratus and peppermint plant pulverized together, with the addition of loaf sugar and brandy. Dose from one-sixteenth of an ounce to one-eighth of an ounce repeated, if necessary, two or three times a day.

Hot seasons are especially apt to produce disorders of the liver. These arise from two causes—either too high living, producing congestion or fulness of the liver; or too great abstemiousness, producing a contracted and inactive condition. In the former case, alcoholic drinks must be laid aside, fruits and vegetables freely used, and habits of activity adopted. In the latter, the appetite should be cultivated, and rest and quietness sought. If we cannot escape the malarious atmosphere of a fever district, and have reason to believe an attack probable, a moderate use of the tonic bitters such as hydrastis, columbo and quassia, will do much to fortify the constitution. "The true hygienic principle is, that we should never be cured of diseases, but should always meet them by prevention instead of cure. "The time may come," says the author, in conclusion, "when a well educated man will be ashamed to acknowledge that he was ever sick."

Wholesome Beverage.

Take of the best white Jamaica ginger root (bruised) 2 ounces; cream of tarter 1 ounce; water, 6 quarts; to be boiled for about five minutes, then strained; to the strained liquor add one pound of the best white sugar, and again put on the fire and keep stirred until the sugar is perfectly dissolved; then pour into an earthen vessel into which has been previously put two drachms of tartaric acid and the rind of one lemon, and let it remain until the heat is reduced to lukewarm temperature; then add a tablespoonful of yeast, stirring them well together, and bottle for use, the corks of which must be well tied down. It will be in high perfection in a few days.—Exchange Paper.

Preservative against Moths.

A small piece of paper or linen moistened with spirits of turpentine, and put into a wardrobe or bureau for a single day, two or three times a year, is sufficient preservative against moths.

Improved Way of Making Bread.

The Paris correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser, speaks of a plan invented by a baker of that city, to reduce the cost of bread. He puts in one part of rice to five of wheat flour, and the economy effected reaches the very considerable figure of one sou in the two pound loaf. The Government has had the bread examined by competent persons, and has authorized the sale of it, at a less rate than fixed by the police. The demand is such that the baker cannot supply it. Neither the nutriment nor the taste of the bread would appear to be affected by the presence of the new ingredient.

To Restore Color in Prints.

A little alum dissolved in the rinse water will restore green or black. A little vinegar added to the rinse water will restore red.—Ohio Cultivator.

An Excellent Disinfectant.

A mixture of soda-ash with stone lime, is said, by a correspondent of the Ledger, to be a much more reliable purifying agent than lime or chloride of lime. The proper proportions, for an ordinary sized cess-pool, are twenty-five pounds of soda-ash, dissolved by itself with boiling water, and one peck of stone lime, slaked by itself. The two when mixed together, will make about a barrel in quantity.

Fine Blacking for Dress Shoes.

Beat up two eggs, add a teaspoonful of alcohol, a lump of sugar, and ivory black to thicken; it should be laid on and polished like other blacking, and left a day to harden before it is used.

Agricultural, &c.

Hilling Corn.

Hilling corn is an attempted subsitute for deep ploughing. If corn land is ploughed deep, there is no need of hilling. The roots will strike down, instead of stopping at a hard-pan, and waiting for mellow earth, in the form of hilling, to put over them. By deep ploughing you give the roots a chance to go as deep as nature requires without having the earth piled over them. Never disturb the roots by ploughing after the 10th of July. If weeds, or grass are getting up, cut them off, but it is better to "let the wheat and the tares" grow together, lest while ye dig up the tares ye pluck up also the corn with them."—Ohio Farmer.

Cabbage with Corn.

Mr. Brooks, of Princeton, at the last Legislative Agricultural meeting in Boston, alluded to the practice of planting cabbage among Indian corn. He knew an instance where cabbage were planted in alternate rows with corn, and the cabbage sold for $150 per acre.

Change of Feed for Horses.

The kind of food for animals should be changed frequently. A horse, long kept on shorts, will be affected by a fever in his legs and feet, producing a result similar to founder. Shorts, corn meal, or cob meal, should never be given except in a mixed state with cut hay, or straw. This will require them to eat slower, and the food is better prepared for digestion. If given alone, it ferments rapidly in the stomach, produces a general fever, injures the digestive powers, and finally produces a stiffness throughout the limbs. When these results are discovered, the remedy is a change of food. Continued feeding on oats, alone, will produce the same results as shorts, or meal; and many a founder is caused by it, as well as by feeding, or drinking when the horse is warm. If necessity compels a person to feed a horse, on shorts, corn meal, oat meal, or cob meal, a supply of salt should be added to prevent fermentation in the stomach.—Ohio Farmer.

Blanketing Cows.

A correspondent of the Rural Intelligencer has been travelling through Holland and says: "Great care is taken of their cows, both in the winter and in the summer; and in a lowery wet day, you will see the cows in the field covered with blankets; ay, even more commonly than a horse is blanketed here in the winter. This care is well repaid by a greater flow of milk and a less consumption of forage."

A New Spring for Gates.

Dr. Peck mentioned an experiment he had tried successfully, in applying a cheap spring to iron gates, that is far preferable to any other, or to a chain and weight. Take a piece of India-rubber, eight inches long, two inches wide, and one inch thick, and fasten it by staples to the back of the gate and post, and when the gate opens, it bends up, but the disposition to straighten is so great, that it will push the gate to, and never fails to work, summer or winter.

Newly Invented Horse Shoe.

A patent has recently been granted to a mechanic of Philadelphia, for an improvement in the method of fastening horse-shoes. The invention consists in the construction of included flangs or lips rising from the front and sides of the hoof against which they are made to bear, separate, and fastened by sliding into a recess in the sides of the shoe, and secured by means of a screw, thus entirely dispensing with the use of nails, and avoiding all liability to injure by pricking.

Keeping Eggs.

Having seen so many eggs that were laid down last fall come out bad, I am induced to send you my way of preserving them. Grease them lightly with a little lard or fried meat fat. Pack them little end down in bran or dry saw-dust, and they will come out in the spring, right, and no mistake.—Mary Wood, Waukesha, Wisconsin.

Witticisms.

BLACK JOKE.

The appended negro story, copied from a southern correspondent of the Boston Journal is not bad:

General C—— gave his black man, Swaney, funds and permission to get a quarter's worth of zoology at a menagerie, at the same time hinting to him the striking affinity between the Simia and negro races. Our hero soon found himself under the canvass, and brought to in front of a sedate looking baboon, and eying the b be quadruped closely, soliloquised thus:

"Folks, sure's yer born, feet, hands, proper bad looking countenance, just like a nigger gettting old, I reckon." Then, as if seized with a bright idea, he extended his hand with a genuine southern "How d'ye do, uncle?" The ape grasped the negro's hand and shook it long and cordially.

Swaney then plied his new acquaintance with interrogations as to his name, age, nativity, and former occupation, but eliciting no replies beyond a knowing shake of the head, or a merry twinkling of the eye, he concluded the ape was bound to keep non-committal, and looking cautiously around, chuckled:

"He, he, ye too sharp for them, old feller, Keep dark! If ye'd just speak one word of English, white man would have a hoe in yer hand in less than two minutes."

A Fair Fling at Him.—A teacher in a neighboring Sunday-school was examining a class of little boys from a Scripture catechism.

The first question was—"Who stoned Stephen?"

Answer—"The Jews."

Second question—"Where did they stone him?"

Answer—"Beyond the limits of the city."

The third question—"Why did they take him to the limits to the city?" was not in the book, and proved a poser to the whole class; it passed from hend to foot without an answer being attempted.

At length a little fellow, who had been scratching his head all the while, looked up and said,

"Well, I don't know, unless it was to get a fair fling at him!"

☞ We have heard of cool things, but never anything cooler than the following: The landlord of a hotel at Whitehall called a boarder to him one day, and said: "Look o'here! I want you to pay your board-bill, and you must. I've heard enough; and I tell you now, that you don't leave my house till you pay it!" "Good!" said his lodger: "just put that in writing; make a regular agreement of it; I'll stay with you as long as I live!"

☞ "You are from the country, are you not?" said a know nothing clerk in a certain book store, to a plain dressed individual who had given him some trouble.—"Yes."—"Well, here's an essay on the rearing of calves."—"That," said the man, as he slowly turned to leave the store, "you had better present to your mother."

☞ A lady residing in New England, had a number of female servants in her family, and to whom she, on one occasion, gave to each a pair of her cast-off, half-worn shoes, found the following impromptu on her chamber mantel, the succeeding morning:

"How careful should our mistress be
The narrow path to choose.
When all the maids within her house
Are walking in her shoes."

Free Trade.—One day at a farm-house, a wag saw an old gobbler trying to eat the strings of some night-caps that lay on the grass to bleach. "That," said he, "is what I call introducing cotton into Turkey."

☞ "I don't like to patronize this line," said a culprit to a hangman. "Oh, never mind this once," was the reply, "it will soon suspend its operation."

☞ Why would ladies make better traders and pedlars than men?—Because they never get shaved.

☞ The city editor says that a man in New York got himself into trouble in marrying two wives. A western editor replies, by assuring his cotemporary that a good many men in Michigan have done the same by marrying only one.

An Incident.—Faxon, of The Cairo Times, relates the following among the incidents of the late fire at that place, and is personally responsible for them:—During the heat of the fire on shore, a man was met coming out of Arter's store with his arms full of canisters of powder. He stopped at the door and very coolly remarked, "Here, d—n it, some body take and throw this powder in the river, my hat's on fire!" and sure enough his hat was burning briskly. One more: Jim started from the store with a pretty good-sized box, which he supposed contained dry-goods. When told that it was powder, his hair raised straight up, he dropped the box, sat down and spread his coat tail over it, and commenced yelling lustily for a bucket of water. He got it and poured it on the box, assuring the by-standers that it was more than half burned up, and that if the water had arrived a moment later, he couldn't have saved a bit of it!

To Look Delicate.—"What do you do to make you look delicate?" said one young woman, with an eruption on her face, to another who looked like one of the departed. "Why," said she, "sometimes I eat slate pencils and chalk, and then, for a change, I drink vinegar and chew green tea. When those fail, I lace tighter, and wear the thinnest soled shoes I can buy."

From the London Times, May 11th.

The Position of the United States.

We adverted cursorily on a former occasion to a letter which appears in our columns from an able correspondent, well known to our readers, under the signature, not inapplicable to him in either sense, of a "States' Man." The object of our correspondent is not what we should have hoped it would have been—to clear the freemen of America from the stigma implied in the charge that the sympathies of America are not on our side. To the great mass of men who judge matters on their first aspect, and have neither leisure nor inclination to sound the depths of political questions, there is something shocking, and even revolting, in the admission that, though policy may keep the United States neutral in the present contest, and interest may plead as loudly in favour of Russia as of England and France, the feelings and sympathies of America, the conscience and heart of the nation, which are not under the control of interest, nor subject to considerations of State policy, side with the Powers of the East in their present deadly struggle with the Powers of the West.

To those who know America only from the overstrained praise of the Manchester school, who look upon her as the paradise of the poor, the land of high wages, vote by ballot, universal suffrage, no State endowments, cheap newspapers, and abundant supplies of ardent spirits, it seems almost impossible that the asylum of liberty, the boasted foundation of the future civilization of the world, should in feeling, if not in act, be closely united to a nation and a government, the whole mission and duty of which seems to be to live in darkness and misery themselves, and, by war and desolation, to spread that darkness and desolation over the face of the whole habitable globe. We will not offend the susceptibility of our correspondent by offering to him again arguments intended to induce the people of America to reconsider the question, and to show that duty, honour and interest urge them alike to desire, and, so far as their traditional policy and isolated position will permit, to contribute to the success of the allied powers.

The first reason given by our correspondent for a Philo Russian feeling in America is, that a struggle between Christian nations in arms is a disgrace to the nineteenth century. We hope that this statement is correct, and well would it be for the United States, and well for the destinies of the human race, if such doctrines had taken firm possession of the mind of the people of America. The preaching of the Peace Society has failed in England, because the common sense of her people tells them that peace is not a matter like free trade or administrative reform, which it is within their own power to take or reject, but a blessing which is held, from its very nature, at the will of others, which may be lost by the will of a madman, like the Emperor Paul, and regained, as in the case of the same Paul, by the dagger of an assassin. But the United States have really before them that very option between peace and war which is denied to members of the European confederacy, and, if they would only act on the maxim attributed to them by our correspondent, might maintain peace among themselves and with all the world. The recent aggressive war on Mexico, the armed assistance lent by American citizens to the Canadian rebellion, the destruction of Greytown, and the doctrine recently promulgated by the Ostend Congress of American Ambassadors with regard to the seizure of Cuba, seem to afford some proof that our correspondent is mistaken in his estimate of American feeling, or that the United States consider themselves as an exception to the rule they apply to their neighbours, and believe that the slaughter of "God's chief handiwork on earth" is only unjustifiable when wrought by European hands.

Our correspondent further thinks that our object—the destruction of Russian preponderance in the Black Sea—is unwise, unattainable, and indefensable, and that were Russia to submit to such a proposition she would show herself half fool, half coward. But he forgets that to this very object Russia has herself formally consented, and that if such consent has not been carried out into a formal treaty, it is only because that, by a series of the most disreputable quibbles and evasions, Russia has deliberately eluded the consequences of a principle which she has herself, in the most solemn categorical manner, admitted as the basis of negotiation. The argument then comes to this—that America sympathizes with Russia because England and France demand from Russia terms which Russia herself admitted to be just and equitable grounds of negotiation. If some people are more Catholic than the Pope, surely our correspondent is more Russian than the Czar. Another cause which induces America to sympathize with the wrong against the right, is, that England, being a maritime power, is necessarily brought into colision with America, while Russia, having no commerce, has no grounds of dissension. That such jealousies may operate on the minds of a commercial nation we do not dispute, but as they make no difference whatever in the justice of the cause for which we fight, our correspondent in no respect strengthens his cause by adverting to them, and does his nation little credit by imputing to it such motives. Then the English press actually presumes to canvass the conduct of the American people with the same freedom it exercises towards its own government, its own institutions, and even royalty itself; there is, we suspect, the real gravaman of the charge. America is the land of liberty, and it is lawful for her untaxed press to utter, unchecked, the most scandalous accusations against individuals and the most bitter imputations against political parties; but if American citizens presumes, by speech or writing, to call in question the policy, the political character, or the domestic institutions of the nation—if he hint that a government which decidedly gives to physical labour a supremacy over intellectual capacity—which, while preaching non-intervention to us, sends out to European countries, under the name of Ambassadors and Consuls, agents of insurrection and disorder; he is soon taught to bow to the will of the majority, and to learn that even in the land of liberty freedom of discussion on all subjects is not permitted. From this democratic censorship the press of England is necessarily exempt, and it is therefore no wonder that our American cousins should hear with impatience from writers abroad truths that they will not tolerate from journalists and statesmen at home.

The next ground for sympathy with Russia is the belief of some people in America that England and France were, under the pretence of securing Spain, meditating a Crimean expedition to the Western hemisphere. Such an expedition could only be caused by aggressive policy on the part of America; and now, when we know that human life is so sacred in her eyes that no contingent or proscriptive danger justifies war, and that all foreign interference is an "ill paid trade," there can be, on our correspondents own showing, no possible reason for such an intervention. We conclude, then that our correspondent has given no reasonable or consistent grounds for American sympathy with Russia; but we believe that those grounds for which such sympathy exists are not difficult to find. The slaveholding States sympathize with the Czar as a slaveholder, the fillibustering factions admire, as they would imitate, if they could, the vast scale of his aggressions; and democracy, claiming that its will should be above all law, sympathizes with a man who has established for himself the same awful exemption; and both are led by their several creeds, so contrary in appearance, so identical in fact, to hate a country, where law asserts her supremacy over the will of the many or the few, and where the absolute equality of mankind is no part of the political system, and therefore serves as an excuse neither to the despotism of the one, nor the tyranny of the many.

Law of Partnership.

"The Government bill to amend the law of partnership has been printed to-day, together with the bill for establishing limited liability on the part of public companies, of which a description was given yesterday. It provides that loans may be made to persons in business under an agreement to share profits without subjecting the lender to any further liability, upon due registry being made of all the particulars of the transaction in a form to be approved by the Board of Trade and to be advertised in the Gazette. In case of bankruptcy or insolvency, such lender is not to recover anything until all the other creditors are paid in full, and he is to be liable to repay any amount he may have received, either in the shape of profits or as a repayment of principal, within the preceding year. Agents and servants may also be allowed to receive profits in lieu of wages. Neither of the acts to apply to Scotland. In the short analysis yesterday of the limited liability bill it was mentioned that according to report any public company formed by its authority would be required to have a capital of not less than £20,000, in £25 shares, with £20 paid up; but the clause on this point in the printed bill states that 20 per cent. on each share is the sum thus required. Both bills have the merit of great simplicity and breadth, and are likely to be received with favour by the commercial classes. They restore to the public the right to lend their money or to give credit upon any terms that their own sagacity may dictate, the law merely fulfilling its natural function of taking care by the enforcement of proper measures of publicity, that these terms shall be clear, and that no one shall be led to act, except with his eyes open. Whether the first abandonment of the paternal system which "protected" the public by virtually prohibiting them from giving trust, except in particular modes deemed safe by the Legislature, may lead to some instances of folly is a question on which different opinions will, perhaps, be entertained; but there can be no doubts as to the wholesomeness of the permanent results to be anticipated from throwing off artificial restrictions condemned by the concurrent experience of almost every other nation, and shown by unequivocal evidence in this country to have long defeated the very object for which they were established. —London Times.

Terrible Mistake.

A private letter from the camp, dated May 14, contains the following:—We have had terrible work here. Last night the 18th regiment fired on the 68th by mistake. The Russians made an attack on the advanced batteries and were repelled by the 68th and Rifles; and the Russians returned in a short time with reinforcements, again attacked the batteries; and a fearful struggle then took place. The reserves were then sent up—the 9th, 18th, 44th—and when they got into the advanced trench, both sides were so covered with mud, that we could not tell Russians from English, so the reserve opened fire, but it was unfortunately on the poor 68th. They then charged on them, when they found out their mistake, but not till a good many of the 68th had fallen. However, the Russians had it hot and warm afterwards. The poor fellows who are wounded in advance of the trench are obliged to lay there all day till dark, as the Russians fire on any of our people who go to bring them in. Many of the wounded might recover if brought in, but they lie and bleed to death. The Russians make sorties daily and nightly, as, since General Jones came up, we are pushing the works close up to the town, so the work is very hard upon our poor fellows, often being three or four nights without rest.

AFFAIRS AT CANTON.

Canton, April 13.—In the Pacific squadron preparations are making to have another dash at that wretched place Petropaulovski—at least so it is supposed, as two vessels have gone to sea with sealed orders; two more have gone to Japan, and the admiral follows so soon as Sir John Bowring returns from Siam. It is supposed from Japan they will go Northward. We have had no political movements of any consequence during this month, as the mandarins at present appear to have it all their own way in and around Canton, within a circle of 10 or 20 miles. Beyond this, from all I can gather, the rebels are as numerous and as powerful as ever. The imperialists are taking advantage of the present lull in their immediate neighbourhood, by executing a frightful number of unfortunates. I have been told on good authority, that between the 18th of March and the 5th of April, no less than 3000 people have been beheaded in this place alone, to say nothing of the judicial murders at Whampoa and elsewhere. Near Whampoa it is said there are two separate heaps of heads. The first was raised at the expense of the imperialists when the rebels had the ascendancy there; the second pile is accumulating every day by the execution of rebels. No man's head is safe. An individual may have been absent some time from his native village; on his return the chances are that some kind friend denounces him to the mandarins for the sake of the reward. My belief is, that a Chinaman would sell the best friend he had on earth for four or five dollars. There is great distress in the city from the dearness of provisions. The principal article of consumption is more than double the price it was three months ago. Owing to the state of affairs a great quantity of the Paddy fields have not been cultivated. The authorities are reported to feel very uneasy, not so much from foes without, as apprehension of the rising of friends within the walls. The insurgents still hold all approaches to the sea districts. Our chances of obtaining the last year's crop of Congou, therefore, seems as distant as ever. The fine Moyune greens are also patiently waiting for an opportunity to come down. You would imagine, after last year's experience, the teamen would endeavour to find out a fresh outlet for their produce, but the only reason ascribed for this apparent want of penetration is that everlasting Chinese reason for everything, "No, all same custom." Their teas have come down to Canton for so many years, that they must come to the end of time. About 2,000 packages of plain orange Pekoe, Ankoi, and plain Caper, have been brought coastwise from Tokien district.—The mandarins, however, do not approve of this practice, as they are apprehensive the teas may be landed at Hong Kong, and that they would by these means be "chiselled" out of their duty of 2 teals per picul.

Inhuman Conduct.

Melbourne, March 8th.

The bark Rio Grand arrived here last evening with Captain Penny and five of the crew of the wrecked Peruvian ship Grimanesa, which was totally lost with nearly 640 Chinese emigrants, who were passengers on board for Callao, on the 3rd of last July, on a shoal lying in the mid-channel between New Caledonia and Brampton Shoal, lattitude 10 50 S., longitude 161 30 E.—The second officer and 18 men saved themselves by taking to one of the boats, and were picked up some days afterwards and landed at Shanghai. Captain Penny, surgeon, chief officer, and four men took to another of the boats, and, after sailing nearly 3,000 miles, landed in New Ireland 25 days after the wreck, and suffering intensely from the effects of hunger, thirst, and disease; they were six days and nights without food or water. The chief officer was murdered by the natives two or three days after they landed on the island. They remained there till the 4th of September, when news reached them that the English ship had put into Gower's Harbour for wood and water. Captain Penny writes as follows on the treatment he met with from the master of this vessel, which proved to be the Sydney whaling bark, Australian, Captain Lewin Wilds:—"On arriving at Gower's Harbour I found the carpenter and cooper of the Australian. I made myself known to them, and inquired as to where the vessel was lying. They told me, but at the same time gave me to understand that I must not expect any assistance from the captain, no matter whether I was a ship master or not. However, I was determined to try. I could not believe it possible that he would refuse me and my companions a passage to some civilized place; so I made the best of my way to the vessel, and, after going some considerable distance she hove in sight. I got as near to her as I possibly could, and hailed her; but, though seen from the vessel, no attention was paid to me whatever. Finally, after waiting about an hour standing up to my middle in the water, a boat put off from the vessel and pulled in the direction of where I was standing. I then hailed the boat two or three times before she was stopped, when, after making my unfortunate position and circumstances known, the officer in the boat informed me that he had received positive instructions to take no person on board unless known to him; 'but,' he said, 'as you are a shipmaster, I will take you on board, and I don't care whether the captain likes it or not; he can only put you on shore again.' The boat, accordingly, pulled in for me. I was unable to get into the boat, so the crew lifted me in. I told Captain Wilds, the master, all the particulars of my disaster, and begged him to take us on board, and place us in the first vessel he fell in with. He replied that he was not bound to take us on board, and asked, "Where do you suppose I am going to get food from to feed you with? Do you think that I am bound to take everybody on board of my vessel because they say they are shipwrecked? The laws of nations can't make me do it; and as for the laws of humanity as you call it, I don't care about them. I am a Cosmopolite, and I ask no man's friendship; and, as to the Queen, if I wanted a meal, I am sure she would not give me one; so I belong to no country at all, and owe no allegiance to none." He got an old pair of trousers, and threw them to where I was standing, and then asked the steward if he had an old shirt to give me. The steward got one and gave it to me. After a great deal of difficulty he finally consented to take the rest of my shipmates on board, and I sent the natives back with a note for them to come with all dispatch, as the vessel would sail next day at 12 at noon, and that if they were not there in time the captain would not wait for them. They received my note about 1 o'clock in the morning, and immediately started, and arrived at the vessel about 10. The doctor told me that the men begged frequently to be left to die on the road, they were so reduced by sickness; and they would have been left if the doctor had not succeeded in inducing some of the natives to carry them over. A boat chanced to be on shore when they arrived, and brought them on board; and a more pitiable sight than they presented I never beheld. They were so exhausted that they had to be supported on either side to keep them from falling. I was standing, at the gangway as they were passed on board, when Captain Wilds came up to me, and asked me what he was to do with them. He said, 'Why they are nearly dead now, and it will take two or three months to feed them up to make men of them; and I don't know yet if I shall take you or not. I have a good mind to land you again; I don't see why I should take you off more than any body else, so don't make too sure about your getting off, yet.' I refrain from using the language Captain Wilds expressed himself in, and at the same time from making any comments upon his conduct." In the course of a month after Captain Penny and his men were put on board the bark Maria, and subsequently on board the Rio Grande, bound for Melbourne.

West Indies.

The Tay steamer arrived at Southampton on Monday, the 21st.

The freight on board consists of specie to the amount of 482,382 dollars, all on merchants' account.

The Wye, screw steamer, belonging to the company, broke down off St. Lucia on the 23rd of April. The mails for Barbadoes were in consequence sent up by a sailing vessel, who, on finding the Prince at Barbadoes, despatched her to finish the route. This circumstance was the cause of delay to the Tay, who had to wait at St. Thomas seven clear days after the regular sailing time to enable the Prince to bring the mails up.

San Domingo.

A correspondent of the Daily News writes: Since my last communication respecting the contemplated revolution for the purpose of upsetting Santana's government, the President entered the city on the 11th instant; at the head of 2,500 troops. I am sorry to inform you that he has allowed unrestricted scope to his passions; and previous to his leaving Seybo, in which province he resides, he ordered six of the persons accused of having been implicated in the plot to be tried by a mock military commission, and to be shot in his presence. Amongst that number was General Duverge, one of the oldest generals of the republic, and his son, a youth of 20 years of age. Santana had the cruelty to force the father to witness the execution of his own son, and forced him to take afterwards the same place, in order to receive the balls of the file of soldiers. The wife of Duverge has since lost her senses, and died under her afflictions.

The fate of those who are imprisoned in the city is not decided. It is reported that Santana's black list contains from 12 to 16 victims to suffer death, and the expatriation of upwards of 50 individuals.

At Jamaica, De Cordova reports business as dull, and the country parishes being fully supplied, no immediate improvement is anticipated. Sales of rum have been made at from 3s. to 3s. 4d., proof 18. Sugar rules at 11s. to 16s. per cwt., according to quality. Exchange on London: 90 days, par; 60 days, ¾ per cent. prem.; merchant bill, 1 per cent. discount.

Action by an Advertiser against a Newspaper.—On Friday last, in the Exchequer Nisi Prius Court, Dublin, before Baron Green, and a common jury, a curious case was heard which is of some importance to advertisers and newspaper proprietors. The action was brought by a certain M. Rouselle, a teacher of gymnastics, against the proprietors of Saunders's News-Letter for the non-insertion of an advertisement for which, as the plaintiff alleged, he had paid the proper price, and the result of the non-insertion of which he stated to be his detention in Dublin for several days after he had entered into an engagement with a circus company in Manchester. The defence was, that the advertisement was received at the office conditionally by one of the printers, the plaintiff not having tendered the full price, and the editor having afterwards rejected it altogether. The jury, after a patient trial, found for the defendants on all the issues.—Empire.

To Correspondents.

A rather lengthy, though very good, communication from Chatham, is on hand; but "H." must send us his real name for our private information, before it can be published—will not break the rule. All communications must be accompained with the private name.

The Circular from Amherstburg has been received, and shall appear in our next, by all means. Also, an interesting letter from John B. Lott, of Chatham.

Removal of the 'Freeman' to Chatham.

It is altogether possible that this paper will shortly be issued from Chatham, C.W., instead of Toronto, as at present; many important reasons for such a change exist that did not when it was first started. At first, friends in Chatham were eager to have it there—so were those of London; but the necessary encouragement not having been given, it could not be done. The population, too, of the Western District was much smaller then than now, especially of those generally foremost in support of a paper of the kind; but happily at this time, the former objections can hardly be said to have force. At the same time, it has been proposed, as was intimated before, to make a change in the entire management. The present Editor and Publisher will take the less responsible, but more congenial position of Sub-Agent, or co-laborer in the same department, with several efficient persons now in prospect, and whose names will be announced in due time. To several persons will then be assigned the duties imperfectly performed by the present Editor and Publisher. The parties solicited, and in whose hands the Freeman cannot fail to prove a useful and acceptable paper, are, Rev. Wm. P. Newman, Editor, and Mr. Isaac D. Shadd, Publishing Agent; and we hope to be able to announce, through our next paper, their willingness to enter upon said duties.

As these changes will involve much time, expense, and trouble, we hope that our request to subscribers to pay up arrears, and to get new names, with the cash for us, will not be in vain. As newspapers will pass free of postage, after the first of next month, why cannot there be an addition of three to one in this city, and in the country, the present year? Much expense is incurred by publishing a paper of the most insignificant size; and a large sheet, like our own, necessitates a large outlay. Can there not be 5000 readers to it in Canada, alone, to say nothing of the many thousands we hope to have in the United States? Emigrationists are numerous there, and liberal anti-emigrationists will surely take it also. It has the position,—occupies the ground—being in the country to which emigration of all classes, colors and creeds are invited. We do not fear an influx of colored people, Irish Catholics, or poor-to-live white Yankees—there is room enough for all; some of all do come, and so far from any dangerous consequences resulting, much of the ignorance, and hatred of each to the other, is giving place to a tolerant and more fraternal feeling. It is in great measure to promote that, as well as to promote temperance, a hatred of slavery, and other evils, that the Freeman has its existence? Who will not say to it, live on and prosper? and who will not help it to do the same, by subscribing and paying for it? In case its friends and supporters do not bestir themselves, it, too, must go the way all badly supported journals go, as it should; why keep up a rickety existence, and be obliged to dunn and coax and flatter to get sums legally due, or to invite an increase of favour from mainly those whose best interests are promoted by its continuance? We have said that reasons exist now why it should go to Chatham, over any other point West, not forgetting the great claims of St. Catharines, Hamilton, London, Windsor, and Amherstburg; and to prevent misunderstanding, we had better be more explicit.

Were individual preferences, as to locality, to be consulted, with us one place would do just as well as another—all are beautiful thriving towns; but Chatham is a grand central point for the Counties of Kent, Essex, Lambton, and Middlesex; and from that fact, as well as its rapidly increasing population, it certainly should have pre-eminence.

A Movement in the Right Direction.

A number of the most intelligent and enterprising colored people of Amherstburg, Canada West, have formed themselves into an association for the relief of their brethren who may escape from Slavery and be in destitute circumstances when they arrive in Canada. The object of this association is laudable, and we feel the more inclined to commend it, as in a circular issued by them, which we have read, they avow one of the principal objects of their association to be, to put an end to this burdensome system of begging for the relief of fugitives, with which many of our readers, we doubt not, are familiar.

They proceed to state in their circular that the money, and articles of wear and provisions which have been begged formerly for fugitive slaves, have not in many instances been properly applied, but rather have accrued to the personal profits of those pseudo-philanthropists who solicited them. They particularly censure Mr. J. J. Rice, who for more than a dozen years has performed missionary labor among the colored people in Canada. We do not care to recount their accusations against him, but they are serious, and we hope are made only after proper and careful investigation and reflection. We do not know how true these charges against Mr. Rice are, and as that is a question wholly between him and the colored people, for whom he has assumed to act, we shall pass them over with this simple mention. We have met Mr. Rice, and our own opinion of him is that he is partially insane, and unfit to act for himself or any one else.

But there is one feature in this circular to which we refer, that we are gratified to note. It is the determination evinced by the colored people of Canada to help themselves. We are glad to see them alive to the unfavourable opinion which must be formed of their industry and social position by those constant unremitting demands upon the charitable for that assistance which should come from their own numbers. First it shows the proper disposition, next it exhibits progress in competency or wealth, and it promises also far more intelligent dispensation of charities.

We certainly hope that the new organization may be abundantly successful in the furtherance of its benevolent designs. Whether they have arrived at their present determination to help themselves through an unjust or prejudiced estimate of the capacity or fidelity of those who have formerly solicited assistance for them, and managed the distribution of that assistance, we are not prepared to say; but their present mode of operation is the correct one. The old system of begging was all wrong, and we hope it will never be revived. Those who evince an earnest determination to help themselves in an hour of real want, will surely find friends to counsel and assist.—Michigan Free Democrat.

The above has reference to the "True Band" Society, the proceedings of which we published shortly after its organization. From them we gathered the fact that the people of Amherstburg were heartily tired of the begging for fugitives, because of the disgrace attached to begging for them at all; and not the doubt of the Free Democat whether "an unjust or prejudiced estimate of the capacity or fidelity of those who have formerly solicited assistance for them" did not lead to the step. They are fully alive to the mismanagement of beggars, and wish. ing to stop begging altogether; and, as a consequence, the mischief the beggars do as well as to show their ability and willingness to attend to and provide for the cases of charity that may need their attention, and not to introduce a new system of begging, are the reasons for this new association. The Free Democrat says: "the old system of begging was all wrong." Does he understand this to be a new system? If so, why say it is "to put an end to this burdensome system of begging for the relief of fugitives?" What system of begging for them is right? The Free Democrat discourseth like a friend, and we believe is a friend; but strange that some of the friends cannot learn to look at such matters as they would have matters of theirs, were they in their stead.

"It next exhibits progress in competency and wealth," says the Democrat. Very good, indeed, and very true! "and it also promises a far more intelligent dispensation of charities." By whom? and charities from what source? If the people of Amherstburg are meant as dispensers, and their charities, it is all right. "Those who evince an earnest determination to help themselves in an hour of real want, will surely find friends to counsel and assist." Here again we are left in doubt. Does the Free Democrat suppose that the names to the "True Band" are men who at any time need charity—that they are new arrivals? If so, why speak of their "wealth," if not it would be insulting to whites to talk about "counsel and assistance in an hour of real want, and is insulting colored Canadians, whether coming from friend or foe." There has been too much of this meddling advice and assistance already, and the colored people in Amherstburg, who really mean to stop begging, are intelligent enough to know what to do, without advice, and are pecuniarily able to help suffering fugitives; but this indiscriminate identifying the man of yesterday, pennyless and destitute, with the man who, by industry and thrift has attained to a comfortable position, is the old Yankee "trick" of "lumping" the "negroes." "All are alike," say the colored man's foes, and so think some of his friends. The very poor among the white Americans, or in Canada, are neither identified with those who form associations for their benefit, nor are they generally active in getting up associations to assist them; and the same holds good of the colored people, except isolated cases, where here and there a man of the Rice stamp has made puppets of them, for his individual purposes. Why be so much disposed to misrepresent their true condition then? In no country of America is there less "need of begging assistance and counsel" to colored people than in this, and the very liberal democracy of the Free Democrat is not to their taste.

Newspapers by Colored People in the United States.

Very lately, quite a number of newspapers under the management of colored men, have come into existence, in the United States. In addition to these we have noticed, the Elevator has been resuscitated by some Philadelphians, and the A. M. E. Recorder is circulating semi-monthly. This simultaneous introduction of 'instruments' to promote the elevation of colored citizens, (?) must mean something. Men would hardly risk the difficulties necessarily attending the establishment of such enterprises, unless hopeful of final success. We dare not attribute such movements to personal motives, in the absence of facts to justify such a thought, but must concede to them, the very greatest desire for the welfare of their people—yet, in view of the plans proposed by them, so far as we have seen, we fear that little will be done towards accomplishing the end in view. They are, without exception, we believe, advocates of the old, long tried, and long condemned policy of remaining in the United States, at all hazards, almost to a man, to make the white American give to them equal political and social privileges, in the face of the contrary policy with respect to whites, so long tried by their opponents, and with such admirable results. If there is any thing they should appropriate to themselves from proximity with the Yankees, it is the philosophy of their progress, made up as they are in part of oppressed people, who have emigrated from other despotisms, and the absolute utility of emigration, as declared encouraged, and promoted, by their wisest men. True, the emigration of Europeans has been made to act as a check upon the aspirations of the free colored man—the emigrant has been elevated, meanwhile, but not to the extent possible, had not the popular colorophobia been made to influence him. The opinion prevalent among colored men, that the success of the white emigrant is mainly to be attributed to his degradation, is not true in fact—the emigrant would have had a more secure position had prejudice against the colored man not existed at all—but being looked upon in the light of a necessary substitute for an obnoxious class, when the necessity is done away with by growth of population, or other cause, then against him as against the colored man, political and other influences are brought to bear to crowd him out; but withal, he contends for Emigration, and so frustrates, in a measure, their opposition. The colored man, on the other hand, rejects Emigration, through speeches, and through the press, the most powerful means, and has the satisfaction of moving in a circle without any good results. They will yet be obliged, from outward signs, already multiplying, to "cut a different figure," else we are mistaken. Young colored America will move away of itself, by force of inherent and cultivated energy, at no distant day, and their journals will be obliged to follow suit. Already we hear of the "better class" of foreigners leaving for Canada, and in our Western country, the better class of colored "natives" are coming also.

The Refugees' Home Society and Mrs. M. E. Bibb.

We understand that the widow of the late Henry Bibb, of Windsor, presented a claim to the Refugees' Home Society, lately, for two hundred acres of land, purchased through the agency of Mr. Bibb, and now in possession of that Society; but which was not admitted, partly on the alleged possession by her, of $10,000 worth of property in the city of Detroit, and elsewhere. Mrs. Bibb is reputed a "clever" woman, and is certainly well-to-do for the widow of a "poor man."

☞ The Colored Citizens of Hamilton intend celebrating the West India Emancipation, on the 1st of August next, in a fine style; preparations are already being made for the purpose. We hear it is the intention of a portion of the citizens here to join with them.

☞ The "Herald of Freedom" is the name of an Anti-Slavery paper, just started in Cincinnati, Ohio, under the management of Mr. Peter H. Clark, of that city, and in the interest of the colored people generally. It is a handsome and ably managed sheet, and speaks well for Young Cincinnati. Though taking moderate Anti-Emigration grounds, at present, from the talented character of its Publisher, we confidently anticipate progress on the Emigration question at no distant day.

Correspondence.

To the Editress of the Provincial Freeman:

Dear Miss Shadd,—I read an article last week in the United Empire, on British protection to Cuba, on which, for the pro-slavery and rebellious sentiments contained therein, I intended to make some remarks; but having misplaced the paper, I became indifferent about it. Having seen another article in this day's Empire, from an impudent Yankee, highly praising the former, and abusing the loyal Editor of the Niagara Mail, because he dared to speak in such terms of that rebellious article as it deserved, I beg to say a few words thereon. The writers for the Empire evince great concern for the few misgoverned white people of Cuba; but not one speak of sympathy for the 600,000 down-trodden African slaves who are oppressed by those few whites, notwithstanding they know perfectly well that the Yankees wish to acquire Cuba, to extend and perpetuate slavery. They ought also to know, as they meddle so much with Cuban affairs, that the chance of those 600,000 slaves becoming freed, under Spanish rule, is ten fold to that which it is under that hypocritical Republic.

The mission of Great Britain is to extend freedom to all men; but that of the American Republic, to extend it to only a part, while the rest is to be kept in the most degrading bondage, for the convenience of that part. But a word to the Yankee correspondent of the Empire. He talks about 200,000 rabble invading Canada. He forgets that it would only be necessary for Great Britain to land a few thousand of her Black troops in the South of the States, by means of which, distribute a few hundred thousand muskets and rifles among their slaves, and that fire for freedom, which is now smothering within, would then burst out and burn to the nethermost parts of the Slaveholding Union: then this motly rabble would have more on its hands than they could attend to. As to Canada being annexed to that Republic, as that Yankee braggadocio would have, it is more likely that a portion of it will be annexed to Canada, and so come under the wholesome monarchical rule by which it is governed. The volcano of its destruction has already begun to throw in its midst, growing out of the ambition of its statesmen, and sectional interest, to say nothing about the slavery question, for there is little good to be expected from it, on that all-important matter; for generally it is never united to bring forth any good, but like a phalanx, to bring forth evil. I believe a more ignominious fate awaits that Republic, than that which befel the Grecian Republics, and it will only be known among the nations as one of the wicked things which were.

I will inform the Empire, and its Yankee correspondent, that there are other people than those for whom they write, that have a deeper interest in passing events in America; they will form a powerful element in the the conflict of which that Yankee writer so bonstfully speaks. There are right minded men enough among our white fellow subjects, with whom colored men can unite, in repelling and bidding defiance to any force the Yankees can spare from watching the slaves in the South.

Slave Catchers—Conference—W. F. Johnson, Blind Man—National Know-Nothing Conference.

Philadelphia, June 9th, 1855.

Miss Wilson, Cummings, & Co., Slave Catchers, referred to in my last, have not been seen or heard of in this quarter since; nor have the Fugitives, on whose track they were scenting. The "large hand-bills," however, are still to be seen posted up in various parts of the city, admonishing all concerned to "Beware," &c.

Of the Conventions and Conferences which are in the habit of holding Annual Convocations in this city, none interest so large a number of "our people" as does the Conference of the "A. M. E. Church." It convened here on the 26th ult., under the superintendence of Bishop W. Nazery, and continued in session about ten days, the attendance from abroad, as well as around, as usual, being large; not so large, however, as it used to be previous to the division of the Conference two years ago.

In the way of lecturers, this week, Wm. F. Johnson (blind man) of the New York Institute for the Blind, has been entertaining respectable audiences, on the subjects of Natural History, Astronomy, Botany, Phrenology, also illustrated by a Mathematical Board, the mode and manner of educating the Blind; likewise gave specimens of articles manufactured by himself, and others, entirely deprived of their sight.

Mr. Johnson's intelligence is highly creditable to his people, and though deprived of his sight, as he is, he is nevertheless capable of making himself very useful. For a few months past he has been in Baltimore and Washington, giving lectures, and working at his trade (making reed baskets;) thus keeping himself engaged, and interesting others.

For nearly two weeks past, the National Know-Nothing Convention has been in secret conclave in this city, doubtless, for the purpose of maturing plans to supplant all other political parties during the coming struggle for the next Presidential election. Their unexampled progress, as a party, the many "triumphs" which have been claimed for them, their secret schemes, opposition to foreigners, and Catholics, had made them a dread in the nation, perhaps, that few could honestly deny. Hence the interest felt in the country, on the part of the public, to get an idea of the acts they would perform, in a national capacity, has been intense. Thus the public have waited the issue, not being able, however, to comprehend in what way they should get light, as the Convention could only consent to transact business in privacy. In this, however, it seems not to have been successful, as the New York Daily Tribune, which has always nobly opposed the Order, somehow or other, managed to procure daily reports, which completely exposed all their doings, very much to the discomfiture of all who loved "darkness rather than light."

Scarcely had the delegates assembled, and the Convention organized, before "old Slavery" appeared in their midst, demanding of both North and South, the most unqualified obedience to the "peculiar Institution," including assent to slavery in Kansas and Nebraska: Northern members not being quite as pliable as what "old Slavery" had calculated; consequently, a Committee was appointed to bring forth such Resolutions as would meet the wishes of the Order, as well as the demands of the Constitution of the United States. Hence, after much difficulty and contention on the question of Slavery, a small majority of the Committee offered the following report:

Resolved,—That the American party, having arisen upon the ruins and in spite of the opposition of the Whig and Democratic parties, cannot be held in any manner responsible for the obnoxious acts or violated pledges of either; that the systematic agitation of the slavery question by those parties has elevated sectional hostility into a positive element of political power, and brought our institutions into peril. It has therefore become the imperative duty of the American party to interpose, for the purpose of giving peace to the country and perpetuity to the Union. That as experience has shown it as impossible to reconcile opinions so extreme as those which separate the disputants, and as there can be no dishonour in submitting to the laws, the National Council has deemed it the best guarantee of common justice and of future peace to abide by and maintain the existing laws upon the subject of slavery, as a final and conclusive settlement of that subject in spirit and in substance.

Resolved,—That regarding it the highest duty to avow those opinions upon a subject so important, in distinct and unequivocal terms, it is hereby declared as the sense of this National Council, that Congress possesses no power under the Constitution to legislate upon the subject of Slavery in the States, or exclude any State from admission into the Union because her Constitution does or does not recognize the Institution of Slavery as a part of her social system; and expressly pretermitting any expressions of opinion upon the power of Congress to establish or prohibit Slavery in any Territory. It is the sense of this National Council that Congress ought not to legislate upon the subject of Slavery within the Territories of the United States, and that any interference of Congress with Slavery as it exists in the District of Columbia would be a violation of the spirit and intention of the compact by which the State of Maryland ceded the District to the United States, and a breach of the National Faith.

The New York delegates of all the Northern States gave their strength to the South. A minority report, however, was promptly presented, which, touching Slavery, reads as follows:

Resolved,—That the repeal of the Missouri Compromise was an infraction of the plighted faith of the Nation, and that it should be restored; and if efforts to that end shall fail, Congress should refuse to admit any State tolerating Slavery which shall be formed out of any portion of the Territory from which that Institution was excluded by that Compromise.

By this unusual degree of firmness on the part of the North, the contest waxed exceeding warm, each party refusing to yield, notwithstanding individuals would occasionally press a compromise. Verily, for once, "Sam" "caught a Tartar." The North, though nominally defeated, had the manliness to secede at least twelve of the States, which was, doubtless, the signal for the overthrow of the entire hopes of the new movement; at any rate, so far as it counted on the North to help to strengthen Slavery. The dissolution seems irreparable, and the sad effect quite visible. Certainly, the cause of freedom has reason to be glad.

As your Exchanges from the States will be full of better reports than I can give, I have no need of prolonging mine.

Arrival of the "St. Louis."

New York, June 19, 1855.

The United States Mail steamer St. Louis arrived here to-day, bringing news to the 6th instant.

The Asia arrived at Liverpool on the 2nd, and the Hermann reached Cowes on the following day.

Scarcely had the Atlantic left Liverpool with the news of the great success which had taken place on the part of the allies against the Russians, when further intelligence in reference to their position in the Sea of Azoff reached England.

From a despatch which has been received at the Admiralty from Sir E. Lyons, dated Kertch, 21st May, it appears that the squadron in the Sea of Azoff appeared before Lenitchim, and landed a body of seamen and mariners, and after driving the Russian force from the place, had destroyed all the ports and vessels laden with corn and supplies for the Russians.

Only one man was wounded since entering the Sea of Azoff.

Four steamers of war and two hundred and forty vessels employed in conveying troops to the Russian army in the Crimea have been destroyed.

The Moniteur, of the 4th instant, furnishes the following from General Pelissier:—"To the Minister of War: Crimea, June 1.—We have sprung two mines in front of the Flagstaff Battery; the second explosion did considerable damage to the enemy in the ravine of Careen Bay, in advance of our works. Our engineers discharged a transverse line of twenty-two cubic cases filled with gunpowder, each forty centimetres thick on the inside, placed at equal distances, and furred just beneath the sod, each containing 115 of a tilodrame of powder, and covered with a fulminating apparatus, which would explode by the simple pressure of the foot. The cases have been taken up by the English."

Later advices from the Sea of Azoff states that the Allies have destroyed about 250 vessels and 6 million rations of corn and flour destined for the Russian army.

Conferences at Vienna were formally closed at a late sitting held on the 4th inst.

The London Morning Herald in a telegraph despatch dated the 2nd inst, states that the Allies had taken the town of Strangchi at the mouth of the Putrid Sea—burned a month's rations of the whole Russian army and destroyed the shipping.

A despatch from Prince Gortschakoff dated 29th May, states that the allies have occupied Kertch, but have not pushed inwards. He reports that in consequence of the measures which he has adopted, the allies will not be able to cut off the the communication of the Russian army.

The Court Gazette, of Frankfort, publishes a despatch from Odessa to the effect that the Russians are raising batteries to cannonade the channel near Gentchi, which connects the Putrid sea with the Sea of Azoff.

Another dispatch says that General Gortschakoff had arrived at Perekop with his division of infantry. General Goosenvail had also arrived at Perekop.

Letters from Berlin to the 1st inst., states that the success of the Allies in the Sea of Azoff had made a deep impression there.

It is observed that the large proportion of cavalry in the Russian army will cause the stoppage of supplies from the country of the Don to be felt with peculiar pressure by the enemy.

On the 23rd there was 190 cases of Cholera.

ARRIVAL OF THE "ASIA."

Three Days Later News!

Halifax, June 20.

The Royal mail steamship Asia, Captain Lott, arrived at this port early this morning. She left Liverpool on the afternoon of Saturday, the 9th instant.

Her advices are three days later than those received by the St. Louis.

The Asia will probably reach Boston in season for mails to be despatched in the evening train on Thursday.

The news is again of a highly exciting character. The bombardment of Sebastopol recommenced on the 6th inst., and on the day of the Asia's sailing a despatch was received from Lord Raglan, dated June 8th, 6 P. M., announcing, after a fierce bombardment, the French attacked and carried the Mamelon and the White Tower. The greatest gallantry was displayed on both sides. The loss of the Russians and French was very great, but no figures are given.

This event gave great buoyancy to public feeling, and caused a slight rise in consols. The news, other than the above, presents no features of striking importance.

United States.

Colored Exhibitors at the Ohio Mechanics' Institute.

The annual Exhibition of this Institution, was closed Saturday evening, June 2nd. The display, though not perhaps equal to that of former years, was good, and the visitor was well repaid. We were pleased to find that both in the ornamental and useful departments, the colored people were well represented. In the first was Ball, with a magnificent array of Daguerreotypes, in neat gilt frames. The competitors of Ball may boast, each of his peculiar excellence, this one of the softness and delicacy of his pictures, that of the clearness of his work, another of the life-like truthfulness of his productions, but Ball combines the excellencies of all, and leaves nothing more to be desired in a daguerreotype.

Mr. Ball was last year awarded a silver medal by the Institute, in testimony of the excellency he has attained in his art.

In the Agricultural department, was Mr. Andrew J. Smith, of Piqua, Ohio, who has invented a most ingenious machine, which he calls "The Patent Corn-sheller and Cleaner." The peculiar excellence of Mr. Smith's Sheller, consists of this, that it cleans the corn, at the same time that it shells, as much or more than any other machine in use.

The corn is placed two or three ears at one time in the hopper, from whence it falls on a cylinder, revolving in a hollow iron plate, both plate and cylinder being plentifully bestuck with short iron teeth, by whose attrition the corn is nicely cleaned from the cob.

Corn and cob fall together, on a perforated endless carrier, the grains drop though the holes in the carrier, while the cob is conveyed to the end of the machine and thrown on the floor. As the corn falls through the carrier, a current of wind set in motion by a fan, connected with the machine, drives out the husk at the same place where the cobs fall, and the corn falls to the bottom of the drawer, free from both.

Mr. Smith was awarded a first class premium by the committee on agricultural implements, the first model of his machine, the inventor cut out with his jack knife, while at work in a barber shop. He has secured a patent for his "sheller," and is making arrangements for manufacturing them for sale. He designs having a large "horse power" machine, ready for exhibition at the State Fair next fall.—Herald of Freedom.

To the Humane.—A New York Freeman in a New Orleans Jail.—We have received a letter brought by a private hand, direct from a black man named Francis Watson, a freeman of this city, now lying in jail in New Orleans, where he has been incarcerated for nine months, and at the end of a year's imprisonment, he will be sold as a slave, unless means be taken to pay his jail dues and liberate him. The particulars, as contained in his letter, are as follows: He states he went to New Orleans in the employ of a horse-trainer, and at the end of two months he discovered that his master was seeking to sell him as a slave. Hereupon he left his employment, but "having no pass or protection," he was thrown into prison, and now in three months will be sold for jail dues, unless the humane come to his rescue. He refers by name to several persons in New York, who know him. Any sums left at the Tribune Office for him, will be duly forwarded to his address.—N. Y. Tribune.

☞ The Hagerstown (Md.) Herald, says that the late Wm. H. Clarke, among his various charities, left $5000 for the use of his negro boy Cato.

Torture in the South.—The papers will also convey to you a tale of horror which will make the ears of those who read it tingle. It is in this wise: Some months ago, a negro man violated a young woman in the County of Sumpter, Ala., and to conceal his crime, murdered the victim of his lust and horribly mutilated her. He was imprisoned at the time, and though removed for a short time out of the county for trial at another court, has not been out of the hands of the officers of justice until last Thursday night. A party of men went to the prison, and under pretence of desiring to imprison another culprit, whom they brought in irons with them, they gained admission to his cell. This was at 10 o'clock at night, and from that time until 10 the following morning, they exercised their ingenuity in torturing him! They finished this refined amusement by burning him alive at the stake! The crime was great; but good heaven, what shall we say of the punishment, or by what name call it! Torture a human creature twelve hours in all the hellish ways that devils incarnate know so well how to invent, in this Nineteenth Century, and in a Christian country! The Feejees are no longer savages. Sumpter County, Ala., has achieved the proud position, the high honour of a deed without a parallel in the annals of brutality in any land. Lynch law may sometimes find a justification in the insecurity of the prison of a new country, or the venality of the officers of justice, as in California in former times; but this ought never to be dignified even by the doubtful title of a case of lynch law. It was demoniac revenge, gloating for hours upon the agonies of its helpless victim. The perpetrators of this deed were not Christians of course, but Christian men do not denounce it in such language as it deserves. —Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

The U. S. and France.

The reader will recollect that many months ago, some difficulty occurred with Dillon the French Consul at San Francisco. The French Minister of Foreign Affairs demanded that Mr. Dillon should have a salute when his flag was hoisted and that Mr. Marcy uniformly refused to make any recognition whatever. Since that time no progress has been made in the affair. For the reason that the French Cabinet insisted upon the position which it had taken, while the American Cabinet as firmly insisted on its own. The affair has been recently brought before the American Minister in a manner to convince him that the time for a settlement had arrived, and that further delay would only embarrass the case. The American Minister, by some means, has seen the letters written by this Mr. Dillon to the French State Department, and these letters are said to be so insulting and so outrageous toward the government and people of the United States that our Minister has not only peremptorily refused to make any concessions on the position long ago taken by Mr. Marcy, but he has deemed the case of sufficient importance to make it the subject of a strong recommendation to the Government at Washington to take some official action against Mr. Dillon. —Albany Register.

Poultry Stripped of their Feathers by a Hurricane.—The account of the wonderful doing of the late hurricane which swept over the western country, represent it as having been most terrible in Cass county, Missouri. The Cass County Gazette says great numbers of birds, rabbits, &c., were found torn to pieces in its course, and we are informed that the poultry of Mr. Young, which were not killed, were stripped as if they had been scalded and picked for the frying pan?—Free Democrat.

Coroner's Inquests.

An inquest was held at Hickman's tavern, opposite the Queen's wharf, on Saturday, last, upon the body of Bartholomew Connor, a young man lately working at the steam shovel, on the line of the Toronto and Hamilton Railroad. It appeared from the evidence that the deceased, who bore an excellent character, got his monthly pay on Friday, and he in company with a comrade named Michael Sword left their shanty on the commons and went down to the city and got drunk; they proceeded home, but on their way got separated, and the deceased appears to have lost his way, and falling into the railway cut through the commons, was killed. He was found that morning lying in the cut, and had apparently fallen on his head, from a height of sixteen feet. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

An Inquest was held on Friday evening, by Coroner Duggan, in the Asylum, on the body of James Brown Meredith, a patient in that institution. From the testimony adduced it appeared that the deceased had died from an apoplectic fit. A verdict was rendered accordingly.

An Inquest was held on Saturday evening in the hospital, upon the body of the little boy who died from injuries received on the railroad, mentioned in Saturday's Globe. The jury appeared to be satisfied that no blame could be attached to the officials connected with the railroad. They brought in a verdict of accidental death.—Globe, 18th.

The Quebec Chronicle says:—"Yesterday afternoon, Sir Allan McNab, in answer to to Mr. Cameron, stated that he had seen certain charges against him in the Hamilton Banner, to the effect that he had passed a bill to legalize certain debentures for the advantage of himself and Mr. J. A. McDonald. Those charges were utterly untrue, and he had instituted a criminal prosecution against the Proprietors of the journal.

Strange Accident on Sunday.—On Sunday, while the Congregation was coming out of the Parish Church, on the Place d'Armes, a stone suddenly fell from one of the towers, and cut off the toes of one of the feet of a person standing below. The stone proved to be the cap of the pinnacle on the north-west corner of the western tower. The cause of its falling is supposed to be the attachment of the fly of a large flag, whose staff was planted in the tower, to the stone which fell; the flag was thus made to draw like a sail, and in a puff of wind loosened the stone from its bed in the mortar. It is almost miraculous that more mischief was not done—The stone weighed 386 lbs., and fell from a height of 250 feet.—Montreal Herald.

Destructive Fires in Port Hope.—Thursday, 5 o'clock, P. M.—It is with deep regret we stop the Press to announce a most destructive and calamitous fire, that took place here this afternoon. About 3 o'clock, P. M., the building occupied as a store-house and counting-house, by the Harbour Master, was discovered to be on fire, the flames issuing from the roof of the building, where there was a sail loft. The burning element soon communicated with the adjacent storehouses, where upwards of 3,000 barrels of flour stowed ready for shipping were all destroyed, with the exception of about 200 barrels that were saved. There is also from 150,000 to 200,000 feet of sawed lumber consumed in the conflagration. Mr. Sager's, "Canada House," and a whole row of cottages were at one time in imminent danger of being destroyed also; but through the great exertions of the Fire Companies, and other inhabitants, they happily escaped. Besides the flour and lumber burnt, there were three large Storehouses and various articles of Merchandize &c., all consumed. The Harbour Master's books, papers, &c., were all burnt up. The estimated loss of this most calamitous and disastrous fire cannot at a rough calculation be less than £9,000. Messieurs Cluxton, Nicholls, Burnham, and Coleman, are the principal sufferers, in the flour. We have not ascertained whether any of the property was insured.—Port Hope Pilot.

Extraordinary Premiums to Agents

For procuring Subscribers for

TICKETS AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,

IN PERHAM'S GREAT

100,000 GIFT ENTERPRISE!

The distribution of the Gifts being definitely fixed for JULY 5, 1855.

Any person sending $10 may deduct 10 per cent. or will receive 11 Tickets.

Each person sending $100 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Mammoth Gold Pen and Case, valued at $10.

Each person sending $200 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be

Presented with a Silver Watch, valued at $25.

Each person sending $300 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Gold Watch, valued at $50.

The person who shall send, before the 5th of July, the largest amount above $500, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Piano, valued at $300.

I have been induced to make the above liberal offers in order to remove a settled objection in the minds of our committee, to having the distribution take place while there remain in my hands tickets unsold, and for which cause they seem fit to defer the payment of the Gifts, which was fixed for the 25th inst., to the 5th of July, as will be seen by reference to the proceedings, published [illegible]. I assure you that the postponement is as vexatious to me as it is to those who have purchased tickets. I therefore hope that each and every one now interested, will co-operate with me in the effort to dispose of the few thousand tickets remaining unsold, and thus advance the interests of the whole body of shareholders.

Respectfully yours,

J. PERHAM.

TO THE PATRONS OF

Perham's Third Gift Enterprise.

At a meeting of the Committee of Shareholders of Perham's Gift Enterprise, held at the Academy Hall, Broadway, on Wednesday Evening, April 18th, 1855, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted and ordered to be printed:—

Whereas, in view of the fact that several enterprises have been started and carried on with a seeming positive purpose of defrauding those who could be persuaded to purchase tickets therein; and such fraudulent proceedings have exerted an injurious influence in the sale of tickets in the enterprise of Mr. Perham; and whereas, it is deemed essential that all the tickets should be disposed of before the distribution takes place, be it therefore

Resolved, That in order to allow time for that purpose, the distribution be postponed until the 5th of July, at such place as may hereafter be determined on.

Resolved, That the committee have undiminished confidence in the integrity of Mr. Perham, and in his disposition to conform to all his published promises to his patrons.

ROBT. BEATTY, Jr.,
Chairman.

PERHAM'S GIFT ENTERPRISE.

The committee appointed by the Shareholders in this affair, to distribute the 100,000 Gifts amongst the ticket holders, have deferred the distribution until the 5th of July, on account of there remaining unsold some few thousands of tickets. Mr. Perham, ever anxious to meet the views of his patrons, offers extraordinary inducements to Agents to engage in the sale of the remaining tickets, so that there may be no mere delays, which are unquestionably as vexatious to him as to those who have purchased tickets in his enterprise. We commend the reading of his advertisement to our patrons, and hope that each and all will lend a helping hand to bring the matter to an early and satisfactory consummation.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging these two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as Atticus, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid,)

J. N. STILL,
11 Brooklyn, L. I.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!".

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles exposing the American Tract Society, has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings.

BY S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including in most cases Institutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modern civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one impeial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1851.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I can safely recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

THE

Universal Phonographer,

ORGAN OF THE

American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,

Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonolypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a Journal of THIRTY-two pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing, Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic Intelligence, Notices to Correspondents, Important Items of News, Biographies of Phonographers, "Gems of Expression," "Glances," Sketches, Eloquent Extracts, etc., etc., in four different methods of representing our language; Romantic Print, Phonetic Print, Phonetic Long-hand, and Phonetic Short-hand (in both of its styles). And all for ONE DOLLAR. Subscriptions should be prepaid and addressed thus: "ANDREW J. GRAHAM, Phonetic Depot, 358, Bleecker Street, New York."

☞ Any person desiring to become practically acquainted with the different departments of the Writing and Printing Reform, cannot better attain his or her wish than by sending the publisher $1 50 (the fifty cents in stamps), for which there will be furnished the necessary instruction-book (pre-paid), and the Universal Phonographer for one year.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

Believing it [illegible] of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a Britain United, not based on compromises or expediencies, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and in some cases against the Executive Government, and in many cases against the Loyalty of the citizens of this country, as manifested by the late visit of the Prince of Wales to this country, and by the hearty welcome he received from the citizens of the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be as a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, and all those dwelling under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood, and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. curry.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

Information Wanted

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. Poetry.

From the Little Pilgrim

The Song of the Ocean Mosses.

BY NANNIE.

We live in the sea! Oh, we live in the sea!
And of many colors and forms are we:
Where the waves break over the echoing shore,
We list to the winds' and the waters' roar.

When the sea is calm, we quietly float
O'er the smooth waves like a fairy boat—
But when the storm rage and the tempests sound
On the foaming billows we're tossed around.

And we list to the drowning sailor's cry,
When the vessel strikes and death is nigh;
We encircle his arms, we garland his head,
As he lies at rest in his ocean bed.

We dwell in the Mermaiden's gardens, where
We grow, as on earth do the flowerets fair;
And as they wreath the heads of fair May Queens, do
Deck the long, flowing locks of the maids of the sea.

The Seven Ages of a Public Man.

The London Punch makes the following clever parody on Shakespeare's "Seven Ages of Man."

Public Life's a stage,
All men in office merely players:
They have their characters and salaries,
And one man in his course plays many parts,
And acts through seven ages. First, the infant,
High-born, inheriting a coat of arms.
And then the Public School boy, with his satchel,
And shining lot of fag, going by rail
Uncaringly to school. Then the Collegian
Boating and driving, with a comic ballad,
And supercilious eyebrow. Then the Patriot
Full of strong oaths and moustached like the pard,
Anxious for honor, and not disposed to quarrel
With any decent situation
Suffice that can one's mouth; and then the Member
Quoting old saws and modern instances,
In fair round paunch, with public dinners lined;
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slippered Minister,
With spectacles, and prose, and votes on side,
His youthful views renounced, a world too wide
For his shrunk wits, and his once manly voice,
Trying in vain to hoax the people, pipes
A miserable sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this sad disgraceful history,
Is childish Red-tapeism, sans pluck, sans everything.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

Freme's Story.

"Soon after our union," continued Freme, "we quitted the town, and went to live at St. Paul's, where we took a small cottage. It occupied a lovely position, on the borders of the beautiful lake that divides the district, and from which we commanded a view of the whole of that part of the country. Along the banks of the numerous brooklets that fed the lake, water-fowl abounded in flocks, finding concealment in the high reeds, and bulrushes, and under the large leaves of the plants that flowered on the glistening surface of the lake. Around us grew vines bearing rich clusters of luscious grapes; fruit-trees of various kinds; enormous cocoa-palms, spreading their green branches high up in the air, forming a natural dome under which one might repose out of the great heat of the sun. And here we dwelt, Marie devoted her time to the affairs of our small household; to the cultivation of our garden plot, where every thing flourished under her hand; and to the rearing of ducks, geese, widgeon, teal, and other water-fowl, which after being fed in the morning, went away all day to the lake, returning at night to receive another meal from our hands. As for me I continued my callings, and was absent nearly the whole day. I worked under the brothers Baptiste, shipwrights and carpenters, near the sea, and hard, too, did I labour. But I did not mind that; for when I returned in the evening, I found Marie ready to receive me with smiling face and tender caresses. I thought Heaven seemed to have sent us a special blessing."

"Ah, Freme!" sighed Marie, "if we could have continued to live out of the reach of evil-minded men."

"Our marriage could not long be kept secret; we felt that," resumed Freme. "The rumour soon became current throughout our part of the country that a negro, a slave too, had married a white girl. Now this was a calumny, calling me a slave. I belonged to the class specially protected by Government; had never been regarded as a slave, and by the laws and the ordinances abolishing the slave-trade, could not be ranked with the slave population. But this fact seemed not to have the slightest weight. I was black, and that sufficed to arouse the furious prejudice against color and caste, which is one of the direst curses of the colony. The tempest commenced.

"I had been accustomed from infancy to encounter and to despise the insults, the contempt, and the numerous petty annoyances which men of my class meet with at the hands of the privileged whites in these parts, I despised them still, though they became now more and more pointed and malignant, and notwithstanding that they calumniated one who was dearer to me than life. But I abstained from making her unhappy by revealing to her the cruel sufferings I endured. Soon, however, from rude words our enemies passed to violence. They waylaid me frequently, beat me, and otherwise ill-treated me; till one day, my patience being exhausted and my temper roused, I fell upon two of my assailants and severely punished them both. I could easily have killed them, for I was stronger than they. Thank God I did not. As it was, I awakened the spirit of revenge against me.

"We were now assailed more boldly and openly. Our enemies did not hesitate to attack us in our modest habitation. They would assemble in bands and set upon us at dead of night, yelling and howling fearfully under our windows, and making the most frightful noises. They also threaten to kill us. They called us sacrilegious monsters, and swore they would hang or burn us. Several times they attempted to set fire to our dwelling. Even the police authorities to whom I appealed for protection, connived at and encouraged their wicked doings. Poor Marie's life became one of constant torment. Her agitation of mind was incessant; her fear permanent. She implored me to quit the place. She was terrified lest I should be murdered, and she herself be left to the brutality of a fierce mob. Day after day she urged me to leave every thing behind and take to the woods, where, she said, we might at least live in peace. I hesitated. How could I make up my mind to expose her to a life of hardship such as we must encounter if I did her bidding? For myself I cared not? But when I thought of her, I trembled! At length matters reached such a point that I durst no longer stir from home at all. Both our lives were in imminent danger from day to day, and I made up my mind to follow her suggestion, and place ourselves beyond the reach of our enemies. One night, when by some chance we were unexpectedly left to ourselves, we abandoned the cottage where we had spent so many happy hours, and leaving behind us every thing we possessed, took to the woods. I carried Marie, for she could not walk, and we made our way painfully to the summit of the mountain. For days we wandered about from thicket to thicket, from precipice to precipice, allaying our hunger with wild fruits and herbs, and lying down to rest under the thick bushes. I could not describe our sufferings: unaccustomed to this mode of life, aud ignorant of the locality, we must soon have perished. Indeed we already began to contemplate the approach of death under those circumstances as a happy termination to our troubles. Still it was a bitter prospect to die thus, a lingering death, without a soul to close our eyes or to tender the last consolations of religion.

"But one above was watching over us. Providence was there, and unknown to us, a friend was near, who followed us in our wanderings; one who like ourselves, was a victim to the prejudices of the colony.

To be continued.

Miscellaneous.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

The Priest that Wouldn't Stay Unmarried.

Biddy McCan is a treasure to us, for besides being an excellent housekeeper, she is full of humour, and can tell a story much better than I can transcribe it. Among the number with which she hath amused us, is—"The Praist's Marriage Itself," which I can never hope to give you, as she gave it—it will want the natural drollery of her looks and tones while relating it. The occasion was this:

One morning, while we were still at the breakfast-table, in the cottage parlour, and the doors and windows were open upon the garden, a beautiful little white lap-dog strayed into the room, and at a very slight invitation, leaped into my lap.

"O! what a loving little darling!" said the children—and

"Oh! what a pretty creature it is!" said their mother. While the little fellow began in the most sociable spirit to exhibit all his accomplishments, such as jumping down and standing on his hind legs, holding out his paw to shake hands, etc.

"I wonder who he belongs to? I wonder if it would be possible to buy him?" said I.

"Faix thin, indade, and it wouldn't ma'am, for himself is Feyther Mory's own dog, and the misthress wouldn't be afther taking his weight in gold for him."

"The mistress, Biddy?"

"Aye, sure, ma'am, jewel, it's Misthress Mory itself, I'm afther spaking iv."

"And who is Mistress Mory? the priest's mother?"

"Indade, no, ma'am, for it's the praist's wife, itself."

"The priest's wife!!"

I am an ultra Protestant, yet I was shocked—I looked so, I suppose, for Biddy hastened to explain.

"Och, sure, darlint, it's no praist he is at all, at all, at this prisint spaking, forbye, it's afther being called a praist he is!"

"Why is that, Biddy?" I inquired, feeling quite sure that thereby hung a tale, and that Biddy could tell it.

"Well, thin, for the love of Moses in the bulrushes, honey, hev yese been rasiding in this same thra whole years widout iver hearing spake iv Feyther Mory's marridge?"

"It is too true, Biddy—but enlighten me now."

"Is it afther bidding me to open the shutters, that ye are? Sure they're all open—it's your sight itself, that's failling iv ye, darlint."

"No, Biddy, enlighten the darkness of my mind; tell me the story of the priest's marriage."

"Sure, and arn't that always the way wid yees? afther heving me lave the work to be telling yees stories? Indade, and it is to ruin, everything in this blessed house will be going? Sure, thin, and I shall be afther making short work iv the same."

"Of the ruin, Biddy?"

"Sure, ye'll be iver taking meself up wed my spache, and heving yer own joke—sure, ye know very well it's the praist's marridge I'm afther maning."

"Well, go on and tell about it."

"Faix, thin, honey, I'm going to do the same. Well, thin, ma'am ye'll be knowing that he—the praist itself, I'm spaking iv—was a poor boy. He enthered the saminary as a sizether, which manes a poor scholar, honey, darlint, that is to recaive his edication fray gratis, for the Lord's sake, besides getting his taching for nothing. Well, he was a poor boy, honey, he was a fine, handsome, full-blooded, lusty, young fellow, as ever you see—but more becomingst the ploughtail, nor the howly praisthood itself! Only you see he took wonderful to the larning all the time, and nothing would serve him but a praist itself he would be. It was all upon the account of the pride and ambition that was in him, do you see? Well, the feythers in the saminary seeing he was so set upon it, forbye being so wondefrul bright wid the Latin and mathematters, said he would be a credit to the church, so he would, and they consinted to receive him, so they did, and put him in the training for howly praisthood. Faix, and it must be a hard latther to climb to rach that same! For, first iv all, they pit him on a long probashum, and thin a long novishiate, and thin a weary retrait, forbye the fasts, and vigils, and prayers, and miditatshuns, and innishiashuns, and howly offices, before he could take one step up the latther—maning one dagrai in howly orders. And thin a rapitition of the whowl, before he could take another step, and so on, till he had worked his weary way up to the top of the latther, maning the praisthood itself. Well, sure, betwain one thing wid another, it took himself years before he got widin one step of the top. Faix, thin, and at last the blessed day itself came, whin he was to be complated a howly praist out and out entirely. And wasn't there the hoighest iv rejoicing among all the family and the friends that belonged to him! all but Mary Miller, the craythur who lived on the other side of the road, foreninst the saminary, and crying the two pretty eyes out iv her head; but sure nobody minded her, for wasn't the whowl town aad counthry assimbled thegether to be prisint at the cirimony of the consecreetion? and the praists, and bishops, and the archbishop himself to the fore? So niver a soul heeded Mary Miller, piping her eyes. Only look now what befel! The Lord have a hand in us! but that young thafe ought to have been drumed out of town."

"What young thief, Biddy? Mary Miller?"

"No, sure it's the praist itself that was to be—maning Feyther Mory—av coorse—for look! whin all was riddy the same morning he was to be complated a praist enthirely—what do you think he was missed! and couldn't be found high nor low! and whin he was looked for, it was discivered he had run away wid Mary Miller! and whin they found him, the spalpeen! he was marrid enthirely, and not a sowl to privint it! Howly St. Pather! but the hour I heard it, if the strength didn't lave me body enthirely! Hullaboloo! if there wasn't a row outside, among the frinds and the praists and the lave of thim! Och, thin, indade honey, Donnybrook Fair was a tratty of pace to the likes of it!"

"How did they get on after that?"

"Faix, thin, darlint! it was a pithy for the poor craythurs—so it was! The church forbid them communion. No sowl would look at him. Her people all forsook her—the bit of a colleen! she was nothing but a child, and she took their unkindness to heart wonderful—it preyed on her mind—so it did! till it wore her away to a skeleton. She began to think she had committed the onpardonable sin, in marrying a man intinded for the howly alther! and she pined away—so she did! till she was nothing but skin and bone. And all he could do and say couldn't comfort her—so it couldn't! for she made answer that the Lord had cursed her. They were wonderful poor, too, for no one would give him employment, and no frind would be a frind to her. So betwane one thing wid another—the young craythur! she wasted away until, whin her trial came, she hadn't strength to go through wid it— and she died—so she did! she and her young baby. And afterwards her frinds all said they knew it would be so beforehand, for it was a just judgment, for bieng afther marrying a man intinded for the howly praisthood itself."

"Poor girl! And he?"

"Och, darlint! it would have made the heart of yees sore to have seen the poor, distracted craythur. Sure for days and nights, on to weeks and months, he moaned and groaned, and wept and wailed like a lonesome sowl in purgatery. He said he had destroyed her sowl and body—so he did!—and that it was the ritribution of Heaven on him. And oh! he prayed and fasted, and humbled himself before the church, and did penance, and said he wanted to be a praist before the alther—so he did! that he might atone for his own sin and thry to get her sowl out iv purgatory. Well, at first they wouldn't listen to the likes of him—so they wouldn't! but at long last they consinted to receive him on trial, thinking by the same token, that his graifs had been a lesson to him. Well, thin, faix, it was all to do over agin! I mane the probashun, and the novishiate and the retrait, forbye the fastings and the vigils, and the prayers, and meditashuns, and all the howly cirimonies and blessed innishiashuns, only a great deal longer than they were before, because of his falling off, d'ye see? Well, in the mane time years slipped away, and the ould sore in his heart began to heal—so it did! Faix! they'd better made sure iv him whin they could get him! For by the time the blessed day rowled round whin he was to be consecreeted a howly praist before the alther, he had rekivered his spirits, and was looking as well as ever. And so whin the the morning came, and the frinds and relections were gathered together, and the praists and bishops and archbishops itself waiting riddy to complate him in the praisthood—whisht, honey! but he turned round—the villen! so he did—and he marrid a great two-fisted Yankee widder, wid two half-grown bhoys as big as herself!"

"Howly St. Pathrick! Biddy! and what did Mother-Church do to him then?"

"Sure, she did nothing at all to him! Faix, and what could she do wid the likes of him, at all, at all? Sure, she let him alone, so she did. Troth! wasn't the bishop himself that said Misther Mory had no call to the praisthood? and that the sperrit indade was wake but the flesh was willing? Sure all mothers have a soft place in their hearts—"

"—Or in their heads, Biddy—"

"—And Mother-Church was no ixception to that same. So afther kaping him at a rispictful distance for a while, sure she opened her arms and recavied him back to her bosom, and aftherwards provided for him like any other mother would. Faix, the bishop himself said—so he did! that if Misther Mory had no vocation for the howly alther, he would make an illigant taicher itself—and so they made him masther of the parish fray school, which same he is at the prisint spaking."

"And the family and friends—did they receive his wife?"

"Oh! the big-fisted widder? Sure they all saw at once that it was no use to thry to kill the likes of her wid ill-traitment—and they soon diskivered her to be a wonderful foine woman enthirely—so they did! And this is her little dog. And now I must wash up the tay things!

From the Woman's Temperance Paper.

American Ladies'

"My son," said Mr. N., "How could you marry an Irish girl?" "Why, father," said the son, "I'm not able to keep two women—if I'd married a Yankee girl, I'd have had to hire an Irish girl to take care of her."

There is a biting sarcasm and a fearful truth hidden in the above little scrap which we caught as it floated on the surface of the tide of newspapers. Who can wonder while looking at the pale-faced languid women one meets on every side, that a man would feel it a terrible risk to take such a one for a wife. Lotions, cosmetics, and rouges cannot conceal entirely the pallor of disease, or the langor born of enfeebled constitutions, even though these creatures of hair-cloth, and grass-cloth and padding, and laces, with their sweeping robes of costly tissues, produce the effect of matchless forms of rarest grace. Many of them would look upon a natural waist as an actual deformity, and so with their murderous appliances of steel, and whalebone, and silken cords deadly as the hangman's rope—they bind down the elastic framework of their bodies, and press the delicate organs of life, that henceforth cry continually in their own fearful language of pains, and tremors, and sleeplessness, and indigestion, "give, give room, give air, or we perish, and you perish with us."

God pity these women say we—these suicides—they have placed themselves beyond mortal aid! Sufferings is their lot, and helplessness and continual reproach if they have dared to think. What creatures for wives and mothers.

Ah, these are the mothers of the little wheyfaced, or sallow puny creatures, who, tricked out in all the bravery of fashion, look out from behind closed windows upon the passers by, or walk solemnly beside their nurses in the street. There is nothing of the activity and hilarity of childhood about these little beings, whose fine light hair tortured into curls, and the unnatural blueness of whose complexions tells of a scrofulous diathesis. They look prematurely old—they soon fade away—the fashionable mammas look interesting for a little time in their mourning weeds—little graves accumulate in churchyards and cemeteries—and the newspapers have lengthy disquisitions upon the terrible mortality of infants.

Of course, if a man "marries a Yankee girl he must hire an Irish girl to take care of her." Fortunate man if one Irish girl suffices for the demands of the helpless creature! And it is refreshing to look from the pale mistress to the rosy Irish girl, even though she may be coarse or even a little gross in appearance. Health bounds in her veins. There is strength and power in her muscles. They have been developed by hardier exercise than thrumming the harp or fingernig the pianoforte.

But the men—at least the younger ones—full two-thirds of them, are as puny as the women. What the next generation would be—other than a generation of mouldering little bodies in tiny graves it is difficult to say, unless some of the young men, like that sensible fellow chronicled above, do marry with these healthy Irish and German girls who can not only take care or themselves, but their houses, their husbands, and their children.

They cannot be more ignorant of the laws of life than most of their educated sisters, and they have the advantage of healthy constitutions. The ignorance of physiological and hygienic laws among educated women would be amusing were it not so pitiful. If, by a strange accident, one of the poor creatures happens to know anything so useful, she is ashamed to have any aware of the fact.

No lady who possessed a cage of canaries would be ashamed to know their wants—what food was proper for them—what treatment necessary during the processes of moulting and incubation—what care demands for the well being of the little fledgings, &c., &c. But to know anything of the anatomy and physiology of the human body—how indelicate! To know what food and treatment is best adapted for the children by her fireside—how improper!

We were amused and yet pained to hear a few days since of the remarks of a lady moving in the best circles of this city whose name, among other influential ones, had been lent as trustee of an Hospital for Women. She acknowledged in a whisper to a lady physician that she was much interested in physiology, but she would not have her physician know it for the world, nor one of her social circle. And she is a sickly woman whom, a little knowledge acquired years since, might have saved from long years of suffering. And with all her wealth, her refinement, and education, not one whit happier is she, not one whit better fitted for many of the most important duties of life than the "Irish girl" who takes care of her."

Hay for Cows in Summer.

An observing, intelligent, and successful farmer informs us that he is in the practice of feeding his cows with hay in summer, particularly if the season is such as to afford flush pastures. His reasoning is, that a full, rapid and vigorous growth of grass gives to cattle that feed upon it, a desire for something to absorb the excess of the juice in their food. Dry hay they devour greedily, and though in ever so small quantities, evidently with the most beneficial effects. Every farmer must have observed that in dry seasons, horses, cattle and sheep keep in good condition upon berbage parched and apparently scant, while in wet seasons, in tall pastures, though always full, the process of fattening with them was slow. Dry fodder in such cases is required to give substance and tenacity to the green, and can be profitably used by feeding it to horses and cattle.—Newburg Telegraph.

Strawberry Beds.

Strawberry beds should be kept clean and free from grass and weeds—also the runners should be kept down till after the fruit is gathered. The ground close around the plant should not be disturbed any more than may be necessary to ensure clean culture. Frequent and profuse watering, in case the weather should be rather dry, will be very beneficial—it will pay well for the labor expended in the superior perfection, beauty and size of the fruit.

Before the fruit ripens, cover the ground between the roots with clean long straw—if such an article can be found after so severe a winter—or a coat of spent sand or saw dust will answer the two-fold purpose of keeping the ground moist and save the fruit from being spattered and defaced with mud, in time of rain.

Plaster should never be applied to strawberries—we tried the useful commodity on part of a strawberry bed once, and had the satisfaction of beholding a very luxuriant growth of foliage, but they produced nothing but foliage. It was applied when the plant was in blossom. We propose to make some other use of our plaster in future.

We understand it has been observed to have a similiar effect when applied to apple and other fruit trees when in blossom. If this is so, it would be well for persons about to sow plaster in orchards to avoid doing so, when the trees are in bloom.—Ontario Co. Times.

Cheese Making.

A few months ago I visitied a lady friend in the country. Her table was continually supplied with most delicious cheese, of her own making. I asked as a particular favor, that she would communicate to me her peculiar method of making it, and wherein she differed from others. She replied that she followed the method she had been taught, generally prepared the rennet in the same way, but felt sure that she had discovered the reason why cheeses were strong, both to the taste and smell, which consists in the single circumstance of putting the curd to press warm. She did not use any artificial means to cool the curd, but after it had been chopped and scalded, allowed it to remain spread upon the cloth until it was cool as the surrounding atmosphere, and thus put it to press.

There is a great deal of probability in the above statement, for I have frequently noticed that some cheeses from the same dairy would be strong and offensive, and others mild and agreeable, which may be owing to the circumstances of dairy-women getting their cheeses to press early some days, and being hindered others until the curd had time to cool. It may be well for dairy-women to try the experiment, so as to ascertain the fact.—N. E. Farmer.

Beet Root Vinegar.

In these times of a scarcity of apples and cider, the following statement made by N. P. Fairbanks, in the Boston Cultivator, is worth considering. He says:—The juice of one bushel of sugar beets, worth twenty-five cents, and which any farmer can raise with little cost, will make from five to six gallons of vinegar, equal to the best made of cider or wine. First, wash and grate the beets, and express the juice in a cheese-press or in any other way which a little ingenuity can suggest, and put the liquor into a barrel; cover the bung with gauze and set it in the sun, and in fifteen or twenty days it will be fit for use. By this method the very best of vinegar can be obtained without any great trouble, and I hope all who like good vinegar will try it.—Sat. Evening Post.

Pickled Eggs.

In the counties of Hants and Dorset, pickled eggs constitute a very prominent feature in the farm-house and store-rooms, insomuch that they would be considered by the industrious housewife but indifferently furnished without them. The mode in which the good dames pickle them is simply this: At the season of the year when their stock of eggs is plentiful, they cause some four or six dozen to be boiled in a capacious sauce-pan until they become quite hard. They then, after removing the shells, lay them carefully in large-mouthed jars, and pour over them scalding vinegar, well seasoned with whole pepper, allspice, a few races of ginger, and a few cloves of garlic. When cold they are bunged down close, and in a month are fit for use. Where eggs are plentiful, the above pickle is by no means expensive, and as an acetic accompaniment to cold meat, it cannot be outrivalled for piquancy nd gout.—Sat. Evening Post.

Andrew Marshall, the Negro Preacher.

On Sabbath morning I attended divine service at the Presbyterian church, of which the Rev. Dr. Preston is pastor;—he was absent, and his place was supplied by a New England minister. The building is very fine, of granite brought from Maine, and the interior is a noble temple. In the afternoon I determined to hear the renowned Andrew Marshall, the veteran pastor of the African Baptist church. This soldier of the cross has a world-wide fame, and a very interesting notice of his pulpit services may be found in Charles Lyell's travels. Mr. Marshall's church is a fair old building, and in its interior much resembles a New England old country meeting house.

I looked upon the congregation, and noticed that the audience without exception was well-dressed; the women chiefly wore head-dresses of Madras bandkerchiefs though many had bonnets, and most of them wore gloves. Mr. Marshall, I should observe, is in his 100th year, his hair as white as snow, his countenance mild, without any wrinkles to mark decrepitude or decay. His voice is one of great sweetness and power; he read his hymn without spectacles, and such reading! In sober truth, I know no Northern Doctor that can read as well. It was read as Staughton used to read, and those who remember that style of giving out psalmody will long to hear Andrew Marshall.

I came to church expecting to hear a wreck of a preacher—a negro preacher—I found in the pulpit a master in Israel. Age has not touched his faculties, his mind is as vivacious, and its workings are as true and faithful as are the intellects of men of thirty or forty years of age. He preached for an hour an expository sermon on the man out of whom Christ expelled the devils who were permitted to go into the herd of swine. Mr. Marshall's sermon will remain in my memory, associated with the discourses of great men. The exposition was scriptural, argumentative, full of imagination and abounding in wit, yet all in keeping with the place. I was reminded all through the sermon of three great preachers in the old country, each eminent in his peculiar way. I refer to Rowland Hill, Christmas Evans and William Jay. Marshall has much of the wit which corruscated from the desk of Survey Chapel, while the graphic sketching of the Welch Demosthenes, and the admirable colloquial style of Jay are found all through the sermon. This noble preacher had more points of power in that hour than I have heard in any sermon for five years. I regard him as the most astonishing preacher I have ever listened to, when his age, his social position, and his illiteracy are all considered. No pulpit in New York or Boston but would have been honored by such a sermon. The limits of a letter will not permit me to give an outline of the sermon, but it will live in my memory, and its illustrations would have been a stock in trade for a tyro in theology, and many a sprig of divinity. Mr. Marshall's voice is euphonious, his manner dignified. Nothing but his white hair indicates his age, and I should never have supposed him more than sixty-five, had I not been informed. I must not forget his prayer; it was man talking with God, reverently wrestling with God.—He saw the portals of the city—he had been often at its gates, and it seemed as if he knew the holy ones. Among the hearers were several white ladies and gentlemen, and I was glad to meet there with the Hon. Francis Granger and his daughter. They both unite with me in my high appreciation of the preacher, and Mr. Granger told me that he thought the reading of the hymn was one of the most impressive exhibitions of sacred oratory he had ever witnessed.

Mr. Marshall drove General Washington from Virginia to Savannah, and he observed that during the entire journey he never saw him smile.—Baptist Recorder.

We learn from respectable parties, from Georgia, that the Rev. Andrew Marshall, the "negro" preacher, spoken of above, in addition to his other good qualites, is a slave-holder—he having in his possession more than one dozen human beings. The Rev. gentleman, good business man that he is, keeps several drays, and owns every man that drives them. Colored slaveholders make generally worse masters than white ones, and this hoary sinner may be like the rest.

An Appeal of the Fugitives in Canada to their Friends in the U. S.

WHEREAS:—We, the colored people of the county of Essex, in Canada West, have become acquainted with the fact that there has been a system of begging carried on in the United States, by J. J. Rice, in connection with others, under the name of the Amherstburg Mission for the Self Colonized Fugitives in Canada, and that it has a tendency to degrade the colored people and swindle their friends out of their money, as we have every reason to believe, from facts that have occurred under our notice, and it is commonly reported that things that have been sent here for distribution among the fugitives have been sold and the poor fugitives have got nothing but a few old clothes such as Rice says are not worth paying the freight upon. We have found that the so-called Mission-house that was established in Amherstburg is no help to the fugitives, but rather a curse, as it and those that carry it on use it to make divisions and dissentions among the colored people, that they might the better carry out their nefarious schemes; it is a notorious fact that men who are engaged in the begging business have become able to buy farms and live comfortably without any other means of livelihood; and we, seeing the abuse of this system of begging, did organize ourselves into a society called the "True Band of Amherstburg," on the 13th of December last, for our mutual benefit, to assist the fugitive as he arrives here among us, to relieve the sick and distressed, for our moral, social and intellectual improvement, and to stop this accursed system of begging, that only benefits the few that are engaged in it. We number over two hundred members.

On the 13th of April, the so-called Mission-house that was established here, purporting to be for the benefit of the self-colonized fugitives, was burned down; this caused many new discoveries by us, to be made; as there had been several calls on Mr. Rice, by new arrivals, for boots, shoes, and other articles, and were told that there were none, but when the fire commenced the new boots began to pour out; a number of new boots were saved, a quantity were consumed by the flames; also, bolts of different kinds of cloth, and quite a large quantity of corn and bacon and books, were thrown about in abundance. Here, for the first time, we saw a publication in which we found appeals to our friends in the States, for money, clothing, bedding, and other things. We are aware that for the last few years there has been but very little given out to fugitives, this we have made particular inquiry in regard to, in several large mass meetings, and we find that twenty dollars will cover all the monies, and a few old clothes is all that has been given out.

Another case revealed by this fire, which almost chilled the blood in our veins, was, that a man by the name of Beckwell rented a room in the house some time in the fore part of the winter, he being upwards of a year from slavery, and being industrious, had procured many of the comforts of life, besides having a good crop of corn, and considerable pork, which he had at the Mission-house, (Mr. Rice had a man and his wife and two other woman to assist him in the discharge of his duties.) In the winter, it appears that Mr. Beckwell became unwell, and as spring advanced, grew worse, he being in the care of those at the Mission-house; we knew but little about him, but supposed that he was all right. It was noised about at the time of the fire that there was a sick man in the house. A travelling agent connected with the house soon informed us that he had been speaking to the sick man, and that he did not want to be taken out, and he, (this travelling agent,) thought it best to leave him alone. On hearing this, we rushed in and found him crying for help, and was almost exhausted. When we entered the room, in a low voice he murmured out these words, —"My God, are you going to let me burn up?" We had no time for delay, as the blaze was entering the room, and we had to make our exit with all haste to escape the flames, his clothes and corn were all burned, but in consequence of the Hook and Ladder Company pulling down the frame, the pork was but very little damaged, which Rice's foreman soon claimed as their property. W. Carter, (one of the beggars connected with this house,) told some of the members of the "True Band Society" to take him, for they would have no more to do with him, this they readily did, but when we came to examine him, Oh horror of horrors! we have nearly all been slaves, but slavery never presented a more horrible picture than this before our eyes, he was the dirtiest man that ever we saw, and was covered with lice from head to foot, (this is mission care by I. J. Rice and company, among the fugitives in Canada). The "True Band Society" took him in charge and cleaned him up, and cared for him while he lived, which was but two days, and gave him a respectable burial, the society unanimously attending his funeral. It was at this fire that we found what purported to be a quarterly report, where in he says that he has received things from eighty-seven places in the United States, since he has been here, but does not say what they were nor at what time they were received, but that for some eleven months from October 1st, 1853 until August 22nd, 1855, that they had received seven hundred and twenty five dollars in cash, and had paid it out; we have called upon him to show us what they have done with this money, but they will not tell us; we did make particular inquiry of the people in mass meeting on the 21st of April, where between three and four hundred were met together to ascertain how much they had received in money from the mission in that time, and it would not exceed ten dollars and a few articles in clothing. We could not find that any one had received any new things only as they bought them and paid for it. They say that there has been given out in this eleven months, two hundred and twenty five dollars and eighty cents worth of clothing, we have asked them where it came from and who they gave it to, but they will not answer. These things concern our friends that give as well as those that ought to receive them; and we becoming acquainted with these facts did resolve in mass meeting, assembled on the 21st of April, and 1st of May, that this so-called Mission house was a nuisance here among us, and that we would use every laudable means for its discontinuance, and that we will not countenance this begging system, as it only enriches those that are engaged in it. We did resolve that no man should go through the States soliciting aid in our behalf, as it is an imposition on us and our friends. We are determined that men shall not misrepresent us and impose on our friends to fill their pockets. We would say to our friends that we are grateful to you for your noble efforts in our behalf, and regret that your confidence has been abused by selfish and designing men; we will not suffer any person to go begging on our behalf. If such come to you, turn them away as imposters and let them go to work like honest men. As to the reports in regard to Canada, there is a great deal of falsehood told to carry out this begging system. This part of Canada is considered by those that have had opportunities to know, as western New York, Ohio, or Michigan, and all persons that are able to, and will work, can get a comfortable living here. It is true, the fugitive, as he lands here, empty handed, it takes him some time to get a start, but most of our people are doing well. As to this Mission-house that is burned, Rice and those that have received the benefit of it are a going to try and build it up again. We ask of you as friends of the fugitive, not to give it support, as it is no benefit to us; we have tried for years to get rid of him, but he has managed through intrigue to keep the Mission-house; but God has taken it and our desire is that it may never return to curse us or impose on our friends by sending men out to beg, and pay them $1 per day and bear their expenses; we ask of you not to countenance beggars any longer. We would say that this I. J. Rice did call a few of the white people of Amherstburg together on the 22nd of April, (after the coloured people had repudiated him and his mission,) for the purpose of having them organize another mission board to sustain him, but when they come to question him in regard to his operations, and if he was in correspondence with anti-slavery societies in the United States, he said that he was not, that he was a self-constituted missionary, does not hold himself responsible to any body.

We do not wonder that the white people will not try and sustain him, as no community of intelligent men are willing to sustain irresponsible persons in places of trust, and more especially where it requires moral and religious integrity; as to Thomas Boyle being Treasurer, and Henry McKinney Auditor, they were appointed by Mr. Rice, and not by the board of colored people; by doing this, he has shut the colored people out from managing the affairs of the Mission.

As to the Treasurer, Thomas Boyle, to show his kind regard for the fugitives, and the estimation in which he holds them, he said that they were an ignorant, degraded, lying set the whole of them, and that when white people came from the States, they always go to the niggers instead of going to respectable white people, to inquire in regard to them. Mr. McGee, the chairman of Rice's caucus, said that he had never known of any white person coming from the States going to the white people to inquire in regard to the fugitive, but always to the colored; we would ask if these are respectable white people who are not? and where is a more befitting place to inquire than of those that should receive those alms, and donations, that were given and designed for their benefit; is it of men that have never done anything for them, only to crush them lower in the dust than they were when they landed on the shores of Canada? we think not. If they want Rice, all we ask is that they will take him, and that will relieve us; we have been trying for a long time to get rid of him, but he is determined not to go, although they have seen his cloven hoof and will have nothing to do with him, he still persists in striving to over ride the fugitives, when every body has left him except a few beggars that reap the benefits of the system. As a last resort, he has issued a circular to the people of the United States, to have them organize societies to be called the "Uncle Tom's Cabin and Relief Society," whose officers shall be a President who may be a collecting agent, with two female assistants, and Secretary, that these societies shall keep themselves informed of what he wants by corresponding with him. The miserable God and man forsaken, hell deserving wretch! if any body wants him we ask of you for humanity sake do take him, as we have been cursed with his presence long enough; as to his belonging to the Baptist Church in Amherstburg, as it has been reported, we would say that it is false, he does not, nor ever has, his name is not on the Church Record, nor ever has been, neither do we know that he, (Rice,) does belong to any church in Canada. This is the man that has been receiving your money and donations of all kinds, and what has he done with them? If you can get him and those connected with him to tell, you can do more than has ever been done before, or that we believe ever will be done.

Resolved, That this report of the committee be received by us, the fugitives of the county of Essex, Canada West, in mass meeting assembled, at Amherstburg, on the 28th of May, 1855, as being a correct statement of facts in regard to Rice, and his doings here, and that the committee get this published as soon as practicable, in circulars, or through newspapers that are friendly, or in both, as they may deem best, in the name of the fugitives.

AMHERSTBURG, May 28, 1855.

Southern Insolence and Northern Pluck.

At an early period in the proceedings of the recent National Know Nothing Convention at Philadelphia—

'The question of admitting the Louisiana Delegation, who are part Catholics, was up. But the boiling blood of Virginia, which has been seeking vent all the week against Massachusetts and Senator Wilson, could hold in no longer, and Mr. Bowlin of that State opened upon them in a long and abusive tirade. The whole afternoon session was thus devoted to a free talk on Slavery, President Barker refusing to entertain a point of order, but throwing the gates wide open. The tide poured in a torent for near three hours. The union went all to smash several times. But Albert Pike and others gathered up the fragments for use to-morrow, when the ball is to be reopened. Mr. Bowlin's speech very much annoyed the better part of the Southerners by its inappropriateness, coarseness and vulgarity. He came close to Gen. Wilson while making it, pointing at him, and putting his hand into his face. He charged Wilson with defeating the Know Nothings in Virginia— said niggers were but one remove from monkeys, and acquitted himself generally in the fittest style of negro-driving.

Gen. Wilson replied with admirable coolness and bold frankness. He said he was the last man to shrink, at home or abroad, from the frank avowal of his opinions, and he was the last man on earth to submit to dictation and threats. The gentleman from Virginia charged him with endorsing Burlingame's speech in Tremont Temple, and thrusting him down in Virginia. He did endorse that speech. He now endorsed it, and he should live and die by it, and Massachusetts will stand by that speech. An effort had been made in Virginia to strike him down in Massachusetts, but he was not to be stricken down there by the Slave Power. He conceded the right of the States to settle their own domestic affairs. He stood by the State rights doctrine of Virginia of 1799. Massachusetts had just asserted her own sovereign powers. She flung back with defiant arm all assaults, coming from South or North. He was for the abolition of slavery in the District and in the Territories; for the restoration of freedom in Kansas and Nebraska: for severing the National Government from all connection with slavery. This was the only national position, and on this we can carry the Free States like a tornado; but if the Northern men wavered, all was lost at the North, and the South goes for the winning party. He went for the Union. So did his State. They responded to the sentiment of General Jackson—the Union must and shall be preserved. And they mean that Liberty shall be preserved at any cost. He was for peace, but he did not shrink from war, personal or political, if necessary to vindicate his opinions. He told the South that the North would outvote them on these questions, and that they would submit. We have submitted, and your turn is now to come. Ours is the future—yours the past.

The speech of Gen. Wilson was received with much attention, and made a deep impression. It has cleared the air, and Massachusetts and Gen. Wilson are more respected to-night than any time before this week. Many Southern gentlemen came to him after he closed and congratulated him.

Slavery in Baltimore.

We are often told of the comparatively mild form in which Slavery exists in the case of domestic servants. We lately published a statement from Kentucky, showing in what diabolical manner this class of slaves—and those females—are treated by persons of the greatest wealth and enjoying the highest social distinction.

That story has elicited another of a similar character in its general features, exhibiting a case of barbarity of treatment at Baltimore, where, if anywhere, one would suppose such occurrences as we are about to relate to be impossible. But our information leads to the belief that instead of being so, they are be no means unusual among the slaveholding aristocracy.

A few weeks ago a slave, belonging to a lady long residing at Baltimore, and moving in the first circles, died in the Hospital in that city. He was her coachman. During the severest weather he used to be kept sitting on his carriage-box opposite the lady's window half-clad, and, as was well understood to be the case with this woman's servants, half-starved. In this condition the man suffered and eventually froze. The servant becoming thus disabled, and wholly unfit for service, a physician was sent for, who after examining him, declared that the man was frost-bitten from head to foot, and must die. He was sent to the Infirmary, where both feet were amputated, and he shortly died.

A few years ago this same man's wife, who also belonged to his mistress, was so badly treated that she ran away and prevailed upon Slatter, the great slave dealer, to buy her out of her mistress's clutches. He did so; and she was ever after prohibited all intercourse with her husband, who was kept from his wife to be treated in the manner we have described. This woman, on hearing a short time ago that her husband was at the Infirmary, went to inquire after him. She was informed that he was dead. She fell upon the floor in a fit, and died in six hours.

Another female servant belonging to this woman also ran away. Her son a young man, was sent in search of the fugitive. She was found at the town of Cockeysville. He seized her, tied her to his buggy with a rope, and in that way drove her into Baltimore (16 miles), at a rapid rate, with the woman running by the side of the vehicle. It has been stated by some who witnessed the scene, that it was hard to tell which was horsewipped most on the road, the horse or the woman.

Another female, belonging to the same woman, fell from the third story of her mistress's house to the ground, while engaged in washing the windows, and was taken up a cripple for life. It turned out that her mistress by way of punishment, had deprived the servant of sleep by compelling her to pass the night standing by her side, and thus she fell asleep over her work, which circumstance caused the fall.

These are facts of recent occurrence, and are well known in Baltimore.

Reader, such is our Slavery in its best aspects; as it exists in the heart of our cities. Such is the system as administered by the rich, the fashionable and the aristocratic. Does it not strike you as a system ordained by God, which ought to be allowed to go straight into Kansas and all the rest of our Territories and be in no way opposed or disturbed, according to the doctrine of the National Know Nothings? And reader, is it not a fit system for the widely circulating newspaper, and the godly commercial journal, of this free City of New-York to defend, uphold and aim to extend? Ay, more than this. A system which is insolently advocated among us as being better for the laboring classes, better for our free Territories, than one of universal liberty. Men and women of the free States, working men everywhere, what have you to say to these things? The hour is upon you when you are to act.—Tribune.

A colored man who came up on a boat from Paducah, was brought before Mayor Foley of Covington to ascertain if he was free or not. He claimed to be from New York, that he had got out of money down South and was working his way home. He was sent home to Paducah to obtain proofs of his freedom.

We have a fact from Boston, which is a sort of a straw to show the course of the wind. It is stated that a religious book publishing house which has not pruned its works of anti-slavery sentiments, is selling far more largely during the anniversaries of the present year than ever before. We understand says the Telegraph, that this result is owing to the fact that the churches have withdrawn their patronage from a kindred society, which prohibits anti-slavery allusions in its works. We understand that, in our country, an association voted not to buy any more books at the publishing society. We suppose that the proscribed society is the doughface tract establishment. —Syracuse Chronicle.

The Methodists of Cincinnati are agitating the subject of a College for Colored People, under the auspices of that denomination. The Advocate recommends its location to be as far south as the southern verge of Pennsylvania or Ohio, for the purpose of placing the colored man as far as possible in the climate to which his constitution is adapted —not because kidnapping would be easier. The subject will come up in the General Conference. The establishment of seperate literary institutions for colored persons is wholly unnecessary. If the measure were feasible, its tendency would be to sanction rather than remove the prevailing prejudice against the colored people. We are sorry that some of the colored people themselves are disposed to countenance such schemes.

A SLAVE BORN OF A WHITE WOMAN FREED BY A VIRGINIAN COURT.—The Richmond Enquirer of the 12th inst., gives the following account of a very interesting case which has been decided in the Botetourt Circuit Court:

Eliza Crawford and five children, colored, suing for their freedom. The case was decided in favor of the plaintiffs; the evidence being full and complete that the chief plaintiff, Eliza, was born of a white woman of Georgia. She is now about thirty-five years of age, and has been in slavery between fifteen and twenty years. Her appearance indicates that her father was a mixture of African and Indian. She is now the mother of six children, all of whom were plaintiffs, except the eldest, who never belonged to defendant, and who, it is said, will now be set at liberty without resistance. There was no evidence, however, to show that the defendant was in any way privy to, or accountable for the injustice done the plaintiffs.

To Correspondents.

Letter from Mr. David Marshall, "miffed" about those anti-Know-nothing remarks, must lie over.

"REV. A. R. GREEN."—The papers are sent regularly to Cincinnati; but four names, including Mr. Posey's, have been returned by the Post Master, as "not called for:" in proof of which, we have his letters to that effect.

PROVINCIAL FREEMAN.

SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1855.

☞ MR. ISAAC D. SHADD is authorized to receive Subscriptions for this paper, and to give Receipts for the same; he will also act as Canvasser for Toronto and vicinity.

☞ DR. JESSE BURKE is authorized to receive Subscriptions for this paper, and to give Receipts for the same.

☞ MR. MOSES VINET is authorized to act as Agent for this paper in the State of New York.

☞ As it has been decided upon to publish this paper at Chatham, this number will be the last one issued from this City. Our readers will therefore bear with the delay of at least a fortnight, which will be unavoidable, under the circumstances, before the next number can appear; meantime, cannot additions be made to our subscription list here and elsewhere, preparatory to a successful future West? As papers will pass by mail, free of postage, after the 1st of July, city subscribers will receive their numbers through the Post Office. The Jobbing Department will be opened for business in Chatham, at once. Communications for the Freeman, and Exchanges, should be sent to Chatham, instead of Toronto, in future.

ADIEU.

With this number of the paper we consign to other hands the literary department of the same, and in the course of a few weeks, shall pass over the keys of the business department also, and content ourself with active efforts to get subscribers for it. In taking leave of our readers, at this time, we do so for the best interests of the enterprise, and with the hope that our absence will be their gain. We want the Freeman to prosper, and shall labour to that end. When it was not, but was said to be needed, we travelled to arouse a sentiment in favor of it, and from then until now, have worked for it, how well others must say, but, through difficulties, and opposed to obstacles such as we feel confident few, if any, females have had to contend against in the same business, except the sister who shared our labors for awhile; and now after such a familiar acquaintanceship with difficulties, of many shapes, in trying with a few others to keep it alive for one year, as at first promised, we present it in its second year, afresh to the patronage of friends to truth and justice, and its Editor, the Rev. WM. P. NEWMAN, to their kind consideration. To its enemies, we would say, be less captious to him than to us; be more considerate, if you will; it is fit that you should deport your ugliest to a woman. To colored women, we have a word —we have "broken the Editorial ice," whether willingly or not, for your class in America; so go to Editing, as many of you as are willing, and able, and as soon as you may, if you think you are ready; and to those who will not, we say, help us when we visit you, to make brother Newman's burdens lighter, by subscribing to the paper, paying for it, and getting your neighbors to do the same.

The Amherstburg Appeal.

We give this week, and right willingly, too, a Circular against begging, from the True Band of Amherstburg, and also the accompanying letter from Mr. Foster. We are not opposed to "True Band Societies;" but to the begging that was to be perpetuated by them, through Mr. Fairfield's advice at Chatham and London. Now, if the Chatham Society has broken away from the scheme, in all its phases, as will be inferred from the letter of its chief officer, we say, success to it, and as many more as may be needed there! When it agreed to appoint its own agents, as suggested, and the London Society carried away by the prospect of four millions of dollars "waiting to be sent for," and other things, as promised by the same man, were clamorous for the 'flesh pots;' then, we objected, so it was not benevolent Bands against begging; the only way, we believe, it can be stopped, except to discountenance any and every one who will even hint about it, let his pretensions be as great as they may. It has been to prevent a second edition of the Rice doings, which, by-the-way, we knew about long since, that we felt called to oppose Fairfield's schemes. The schemes by Isaac J. Rice, and the host of notables who beg, or have begged for fugitives, are disgraceful, and the more promptly they are stopped the better; and we ever hope to give the little assistance we can command to bring it about. You see we have an adopted country, whose interests we have at heart, and a people who need not beg if they should be destitute when they get here, and who cannot afford to be known to the world as beggars, and another and generous people to whom we are equally related, that must be relieved from the stigma of permitting such wretchedness as continual alms-seeking implies. If these men will cease their wickedness, and stop "humbugging" about fugitives, betake themselves to useful and honorable business, befitting their station or sphere, and give encouragement to good measures, we will not oppose them; but until we see signs of repentance, and they stop their doings, we will continue to hold them up to the gaze of an indignant people. So the True Band members of Amherstburg, and any other point, who are moved by the right spirit, shall have our help in their labours, and best wishes for their entire success. We care not though Mr. Fairfield should be a member, so he is not permitted to show the "claws," as he did at London and Chatham. The men interested in stopping begging, are certainly old enough to know what they want, and it is unspeakably humiliating when any of them are found to take counsel of those not able to give it from ignorance, or not honest enough to give the right kind. What we want to help to do, is, to reform these reformers, like Rice & Co., or to see them change, then things will be well enough. To be sure, some will have to be on their death-bed first; but a man like Fairfield, who tells fugitives one thing in London, and trumpets his own fame in Windsor, in such a way as to give the contradiction to what he said in the same place only a few months ago, and in London or Chatham, but a few weeks before, and who is comparatively a young man, may live to change. We hope he will; and will try to improve his mind, the same as an ignorant black man should do, and his manners, as an impudent one of the same color would be inexcusable were he not to do—and become a modest, respectable, truthful sort of white man, though of the common sort, as he is; we wish him all that change, at least, and then we will be justified in ceasing to warn the fugitive against any bad schemes of his, for then he will be ashamed to make any.

Aiding Slaves to Escape.

By advertisements from Southern papers, there appears to be a brisk business on the U. G. R. R., just now, but which we think might be increased by a more extensive organization. Slaveholders have organized to stop its operations, and more Conductors should be put on—should be regularly employed, and paid fair wages. Scores of men South, as well as North, and West, should be engaged, and so make the road pay better and the risks of capture less.

☞ Mrs. Martha Ann Moseby, wife of Wm. Moseby, from Richmond, Virginia, is now in this city, and is anxious to ascertain where her husband is. He was known to some by the name of Wm. Dandridge. If friends in Detroit or Amherstburg, or at any other place in which this paper is taken, should know of such a person, they will confer a great favor upon his distressed wife, by communicating the intelligence to him, or by sending word to her. A letter addressed to Orpheus Ruffin, of this city, will meet with prompt attention.

The New Orleans Picayune comments approvingly upon the position taken by the Toronto Colonist against Fugitives. The article will appear in our next.

Destructive Fires in this City.

On Thursday morning last, the house occupied by Mr. J. Lewis, on Peter Street, took fire from a stove in the apartment of some German tenants, and was partly destroyed. Mr. Lewis lost all his furniture, but a few articles, and also money. Mr. Mechaud, a lodger, also lost considerably.

About 2 o'clock, yesterday morning, the residences of Messrs. J. G. Joseph, Meudell, Holdsworth, Childs, and Lewis, situated on Church Street, opposite the Catholic Church, were consumed. The fire originated in the stables, and was thus communicated to the houses. The furniture was considerably damaged.

News by the Baltic.

The Baltic arrived at New York, June 28th. The Allies continue their successes steadily. The French captured the Mamelon and White Tower, after a severe conflict, in which 5000 were killed and wounded. They took 62 guns, and 500 prisoners. At the same time, the English took the Rifle works, but lost 500 killed and wounded. All communications with Sebastopol is cut off, except by way of Perekop, which is also in imminent danger from the fleet.

SUIT FOR FUGITIVE SLAVES.—We learn says the Baltimore Patriot, of the 14th inst., that Mr. Abraham Getzendennor, from near Frederick, in this State, arrived in Baltimore yesterday, for the purpose of instituting a suit against the Northern Central Railway Company to Recover the value of certain slaves, belonging to himself and others, and transported within the reach of rescue by the agent of the company. It seems the slaves applied for passage at York, Pa., when information, it is alleged, was given to the conductor that they were fugitives, but it appears they were permitted to pass. The matter involves a question of great importance to slaveholders.

Correspondence.

To the Editress of the Provincial Freeman:

DEAR MADAM,—Allow me to offer a few remarks, through the columns of the Freeman, if you think them worthy of a place,—the subject is relative to the "True Band Society of Chatham."

As the President of that Society, I feel it to be my duty to speak in the behalf of this Association, and for the County of Kent. First, the people of this County stand independently upon their own resources; as a class of people, I think we have no superiors. In the next place, as a society, we will not be responsible for, or take to ourselves anything that shall come under our notice, unless it be detrimental to the peace of the True Band Society of the City of Chatham.

Again, some believe that we are led on by one Mr. Fairland. We honestly admit that that gentleman was the mover of an association of that name; but we wish it distinctly understood, that he is not our leader, neither do we know anything of his four millions. But, as a body of independent freemen, of the Province of Canada, we stand on our own humble resources, to aid our oppressed brothers that shall land amongst us, and to support each other in the time of need. The Constitution of our Society distinctly declares that we, as a representing a part of the people, do not think it needful that any person or persons living in the Province of Canada, should ask for or receive aid or charity in any shape from the citizens of the United States.

And we, as independent freemen of British North America, shall ever condemn any such proceeding on the part of our people, or of the citizens of the United States of America.

Yours, respectfully,
JOHN B. LOTT.

CHATHAM, June 20, 1855.

The above letter from Mr. Lott, although much more friendly and liberal than we had expected, considering his indignation against us, for what we have in all conscience been obliged to say, is at fault in at least one particular. He attempts to speak for Kent County; as President of a simple society, he cannot do that. He cannot make the world believe that the thousands of colored men in Kent are sympathisers of Mr. Fairfield, and unless there has been a mass meeting, or convention, or the people had before spoken, however good the society he represents, he could only speak for that; it is no part of his duty as such, to speak for the County; he has admitted this, by declaring that they shall notice nothing, unless it be detrimental to the peace of their Society. The tribute paid by him to the colored men of Kent, is well deserved, and will be the more highly appreciated, no doubt, as coming voluntarily and individually from him.

We are, much pleased to see, that as President of the Society, he now distinctly disavows Mr. Fairfield's leadership, or influence over them at present, and also their future condemnation of those, whether "citizens of the United States or Canada," who shall encourage begging, or receiving the "goods;" it is a pity such influence was not repelled in the first instance. Had Fairfield not been allowed to sway their better judgments, there would not have been so much confusion in Chatham. It would be better for societies and individuals, had they better memories, for then they would not forget so soon the contradictory statements made by Fairfield and such men. However, we are pleased to see that a step in the right way is being taken by the Chatham Society, and hope they will stick to it. Of course, we are not influenced by Constitutions, they are stretched to suit any case often, but this public committal against begging, or receving such goods and money, must tell powerfully against them, should they ever do what we hope they will not, attempt to change ground.

While speaking of Fairfield, we will state just here, that a party from Windsor, sends what purports to be a speech, and a cunning speech it is, by Mr. Fairfield, at that place which, from the trouble, and time it would take to render it correctly, and the length of it, we shall not give; in which, however, with much art, a deal of hypocrisy and cant about God, and the poor fugitives, a great deal of "fudge" about the battles he has fought, and full grown puffs of his 21 years services to the fugitives, and other "whoppers," we are represented as being wrong some, and himself some. The artful trumpeter of his own doubtful fame, has, to believe his reporter, made our "truest friends" feel very sorry for us. Cannot help it, though. If we have any friends weak enough to be carried away by that concentration of ignorance, brass, folly and flesh, we can only say we are ashamed of them. We hope the time will come, when they will prossess enough of spirit and intelligence to estimate our actions and motives, without getting men of his class to help them, if they should never grow that tall, we can afford to lose their friendship. We shall also be able to attend to cases of unnecessary or injurious influence or meddling, by Fairfield, or any other man, and when the proper time comes, shall not fail to state out in meetings, facts in our possession, which if currently known at present, would make men and women cautious about fraternizing several pretended philanthropists, now handed around, lest the discerning might be compelled to adopt the old maxim in regard to many we would like to see in better company, that "birds of a feather flock together."

For the Provincial Freeman.

AMHERSTBURG, June 20th, 1855.

MISS M. A. SHADD,—I have seen several publications in the Freeman, pro and con, in relation to Mr. Fairfield; I shall leave him to fight his own battles; but there is one thing I shall defend, and that is, the "True Band Society." I am a member of it, and take an active part in it, and have delivered a few lectures in the vicinity, in favour of it. I am a strong opposer to the begging system, and for this reason we organized this Society, as a death blow to the whole begging scheme. We think as much of the four million dollar scheme as you do, and protest against anything being brought from the other side, by begging. This begging system has been carried on here by Isaac J. Rice, and has been supported by a few ignorant colored men. The cursed system we are determined to overthrow, and call upon you to assist us in doing so. So far are we from being beggars, that we have formed the above Society, in order to let the world know that we are able to take care of the fugitives on their first landing, ourselves. Our Society numbers over 200 members here, and we are all glad when the first Tuesday in the month comes, to meet together to pay our monthly dues, and hear suitable lectures on the occasion. By the promptness of our Society, we have been able to relieve all cases of suffering, and have some fifty dollars in the treasury, in readiness. Is this not right? Are we not acting like men? Do you not sanction our course, and wish us God speed?

LEVI FOSTER.

P. S.—I send you "An Appeal of the Fugitives in Canada to their Friends in the United States;" will you please to give it room in your valuable paper? If it is too large for one insertion, continue it in two or three, to suit your convenience.

Mass Meeting at Chatham.

The Colored Citizens of this place, held a Mass Meeting, on Saturday, June 23rd, in the 1st Baptist Chapel, on King St., for the purpose of expressing their sympathy with Her Majesty's Government in its present struggle with Russia, and to awaken colored men to their duty in this emergency. The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. H. J. Young, Mr. H. C. Jackson was appointed Chairman, and I. D. Shadd, Secretary. Messrs. H. H. Hawkins, J. Walden and J. B. Lott, who were appointed at a previous meeting to make speeches on the occasion, were then called for; but the two former being absent, Mr. J. C. Brown was called upon to address the meeting. Mr. Brown being indisposed, was rather brief in his remarks, but pressed upon the minds of the people the necessity of being prepared to act like men, should their services be needed by the Government. He was frequently interrupted with applause, Mr. Brown was followed by Revds. M. L. Gales and J. J. Fitzgerald, who spoke at considerable length. After which, the following resolutions were offered by I. D. Shadd, and adopted.

1. Resolved—That we, the Colored people of Kent County, Canada West, assembled in Mass Meeting, this 23rd of June, feeling indebted to Her Most Gracious Majesty, and Her Government, make known our willingness and determination to assist in arresting the usurpations of Russia or any other power.

2. Resolved—That after having been subjected to the iniquitous system of Yankee oppression, and having the privilege of a home on British Territory extended to us, in common with all others of Her adopted subjects, the duty devolves upon us to aid in any and every case where we would be in any way serviceable.

3. Resolved—That in consideration of the difficulties existing between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Russia, and forming as we do a portion of the subjects of the former, we deeply sympathize with Her Most Gracious Majesty in the loss of those brave and gallant troops who waded in the blood of thousands with invincible courage, to break the iron arm of Russian oppression.

4. Resolved,—That it is the duty of every man to act up to the above Resolution, and each and every one who is not willing and does not feel it to be his duty to stand in defence of the Government that shields him from oppression, is not worthy of the esteem of the Canadian people, and should not be allowed the privileges of British subjects.

Moved by Mr. J. C. Brown and adopted:—

That we return thanks to the Editress of the Provincial Freeman, for the noble stand she has taken, in advocating these Provinces as a home of freedom for all, and a land adopted to promote the prosperity of the people who make it their residence.

Moved by Rev. J. J. Fitzgerald,—

That the Proceeding of this Meeting be published by the Secretary, in the Provincial Freeman, and Chatham papers; and that papers friendly be requested to copy.

J. C. JACKSON, Chairman.

I. D. SHADD, Secretary.

For the Provincial Freeman.

DEAR FREEMAN:—Having seen nothing in the papers relative to these matters, I hasten to place you in possession of the following vague items of information, as I received them, under the hope that some of your readers, friendly to the oppressed, and who may be acquainted with the individual, whose name is herein mentioned, may recognize his name, and finally be able to render him some assistance.

My informant, an elderly gentleman, who resides here, but who formerly resided in the Township of West Guillimbury, says, that on a recent visit to West Guillimbury and Tecumseh, he learned that a letter had been received some weeks since, by his acquaintance, Mr. Giles Webb, (also formerly of West Guillimbury, 10th Con. two miles from Pentanguishene Road, but now of Tecumseh, from John Tuckett, a colored native of the West Indies, stating that he is now in slavery, having been kidnapped in the Northern States and taken South. It appears that Mr. Tuckett was brought from the West Indies, some twenty years ago, by Mr. Webb, with whom he lived until he became a young man. During his stay with Mr. Webb, he was frequently in the employ of my informant, who speaks in high terms of him, and who also says, that as near as he can re-remember, it has not been quite two years since Mr. Tuckett left Canada, and went to the States.

I am sorry to have to inform you, also, that a melancholy occurrence transpired near this place, on the afternoon of the 23rd inst., the particulars of which seem to be as follows:—A man by the name of John Wood, occupying a house near the Railroad, about two miles from this place, had gone to his work, and left his wife and two children at home. In the course of the afternoon, Mrs. Wood having occasion to go to Lefroy, left the children at the house, and was absent a few hours, during which her husband returned from his work, and found the children amusing themselves at the door. Having concluded to take a walk across the lot (100 acres,) and look at a piece of work there, which he has on hand, he locked the two children (one over four, and the other over six years of age) in the house, to prevent their going too near the Railway in his absence; before he got back, however, the house took fire, and although he arrived in time to save the lives of his children, by exposing his own to danger, he either could not find them or could not get at them without being absolutely burned to death in the attempt. The house was burned to the ground, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts made to save it; and it was afterwards found that the children had crept under the bed, which had fallen upon them, and protected that part of them from the flames, which lay next the floor. The poor little creatures perished, locked in each others embrace, which could be seen from what remained of them. A feeling of intense pity pervades our little community, and the mental condition of the parents and relatives may be far better imagined than described.

The religious people of this region seem to be quite active in their proceedings; numbers have arrived here within the last few days, for the purpose of attending a Camp-meeting in this vicinity.

Yours, truly,
Z. H. M.

To the Editress of the Provincial Freeman:

DEAR MADAM,—I stated to you some time since, that after making a tour of observation through the Northern and Western States, I should then make a similar one through the Provinces; and in the mean time would re-exhibit the bleeding back of "Uncle Tom," &c.; and, in addition, add what I might deem best to promote our common cause. Since that time, I have been on several reconnoitring expeditions in this vicinity, preparatory to the ultimate undertaking. I find that by a little observation and attention, that volumes of useful information relative to our people, their pursuits, inclinations, circumstances, condition and progress, may be readily obtained. The most that will be required will be to collect it, and arrange it in such a way as to make it useful to the public in general, and the travelling portion in particular. I propose to do this, as well as I can, and transmit the same, from time to time, for the columns of the Freeman, i. e., should you deem it worthy. I shall endeavour to extend my observations, first to Society, in general; secondly, Churches, Schools, &c., and Business pursuits, in which the colored people are now, or may engage in; and, thirdly, a brief notice of the principle Colored Men and Women in public or private life, &c., &c., under the following heading:—"INCIDENTS, INTERVIEWS, AND OBSERVATIONS." By a Colored Tourist. To be numbered in regular succession.

What I have already met with, seen, and heard, affords ample material for several articles, for which I have taken notes, until a more convenient season. My first observation is, that we need more public men and women more devoted and better informed; that is what has struck me most forcibly, as yet. I think now that I will be in Canada in August; but I will be more definite in future.

Yours, &c.
J. N. S.

Newburgh, 15th June, 1855.

To the Editress of the Provincial Freeman:

MY DEAR MADAM,—I have been a constant reader of the Freeman, ever since its existence, but shall not say anything about its value, necessity, &c., they being qualities which, I opine, are at the present inseparable from it, and without which it could not possibly live through these dull times; neither is it to say much about the times, state of the crops, and such matters of every day observation, that I have presumed to aspire to a place in your columns, but for the purpose of congratulating you on the re-appearance in your columns of such an extensive correspondence. In the few first months of the existence of your Journal, your correspondents were quite numerous: "Benjamin, of Chatham," "Henrietta S—," and a "Dolly Bangs," I recollect distinctly, as among those who furnished wit and humour, which was much appreciated, in connection with the more sober articles. In a short time, however, the zeal of the writers began to wane. "Cannuck," the "eloquent," ceased to appear. "Henrietta" and "Dolly," I believe, appeared but once; and "Benjamin," the inimitable Benjamin, certainly must have lost his pen. I must, Madam Editor, really come to that conclusion, for it is not surely in the nature of that gentleman to remain silent, while pens, ink and paper are in his reach, and matters of such interest transpiring around him.

I was much pleased with the article from "Z. H. M.," which appeared June 9th. "Z. H. M." is quite an enterprising gentleman, one in whom poetry and business tact are combined—by-the-way, he is a poet, of that fact I have had an occular demonstration; but I need not tell you that, for his description of Lefroy, where "the ear" "is held in sweet suspension" by the "wild songsters," tells us much.

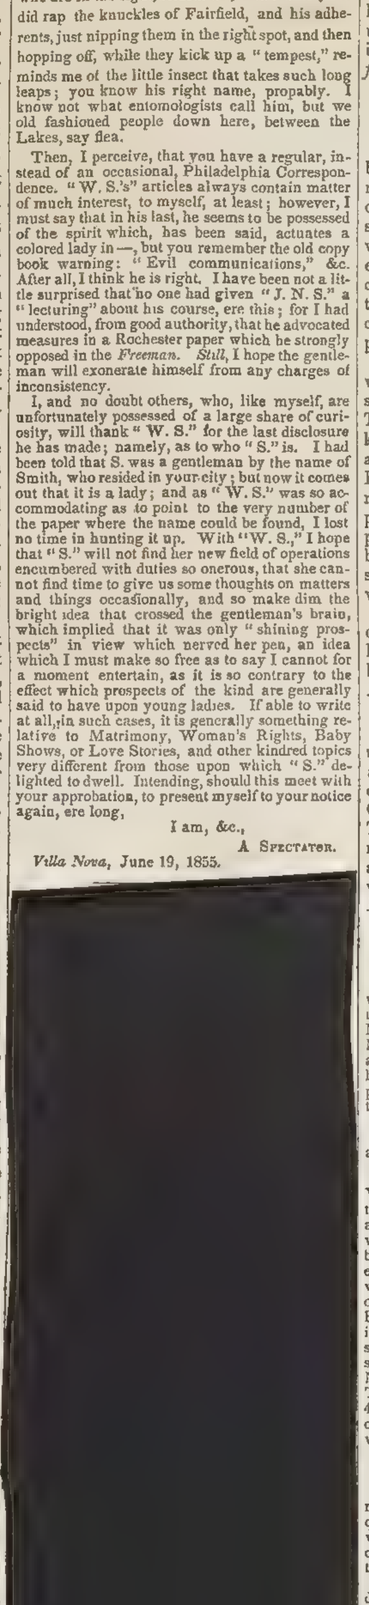
Then there is "X. Y. Z.," of course there is no use of asking who he is, for it seems he does not want us to know; but he, to my mind, is a "true blue;" just the one for the times, precisely. Ah! I feel like having a hearty shake of his hand just at "this present." I would walk all the way from our village to Chatham—supposing there was no railroad—just to get a glimpse of his phiz. Indeed, I have a real brotherly affection already, He is so well encased in the armour of truth, that all the thunder of the opposites, affects him not a bit. He does not get angry, not he; those who are in the right, seldom do; and the way he did rap the knuckles of Fairfield, and his adherents, just nipping them in the right spot, and then hopping off, while they kick up a "tempest," reminds me of the little insect that takes such long leaps; you know his right name, propably. I know not what entomologists call him, but we old fashioned people down here, between the Lakes, say flea.

Then, I perceive, that you have a regular, instead of an occasional, Philadelphia Correspondence. "W. S.'s" articles always contain matter of much interest, to myself, at least; however, I must say that in his last, he seems to be possessed of the spirit which, has been said, actuates a colored lady in—, but you remember the old copy book warning: "Evil communications," &c. After all, I think he is right. I have been not a little surprised that no one had given "J. N. S." a "lecturing" about his course, ere this; for I had understood, from good authority, that he advocated measures in a Rochester paper which he strongly opposed in the Freeman. Still, I hope the gentleman will exonerate himself from any charges of inconsistency.

I, and no doubt others, who, like myself, are unfortunately possessed of a large share of curiosity, will thank "W. S." for the last disclosure he has made; namely, as to who "S." is. I had been told that S. was a gentleman by the name of Smith, who resided in your city; but now it comes out that it is a lady; and as "W. S." was so accommodating as to point to the very number of the paper where the name could be found, I lost no time in hunting it up. With "W. S.," I hope that "S." will not find her new field of operations encumbered with duties so onerous, that she cannot find time to give us some thoughts on matters and things occasionally, and so make dim the bright idea that crossed the gentleman's brain, which implied that it was only "shining prospects" in view which nerved her pen, an idea which I must make so free as to say I cannot for a moment entertain, as it is so contrary to the effect which prospects of the kind are generally said to have upon young ladies. If able to write at all, in such cases, it is generally something relative to Matrimony, Woman's Rights, Baby Shows, or Love Stories, and other kindred topics very different from those upon which "S." delighted to dwell. Intending, should this meet with your approbation, to present myself to your notice again, ere long,

I am, &c.,
A SPECTATOR.

Villa Nova, June 19, 1855.



Arrest of Fugitive Slaves.

On Saturday, the 9th inst., Charles H. Shields, Esq., Recorder of the City, was informed by one of our merchants, that a drayman named Sales, had applied to the Captain of a Northern vessel bound, to a Northern port, to obtain passage for a fugitive slave. The captain, under the direction of Mr. Shields, agreed to the proposition of Sales, and appointed 11 o'clock that night as the time for them to come aboard. Further arrangements were made for the capture, and at the appointed time a sufficient constabulary force was in readiness, who proceeded to the vessel, which was lying in the stream, arriving a few moments after the fugitives had gotten well aboard. There they found no less than six negroes, five men and one woman, dressed in male attire, who were immediately hand-cuffed and lodged in jail. The party then proceeded to the residence of Sales, and placed him in company with those whom he had attempted to get off.

Their case is now undergoing investigation, and it is hoped that some information will be obtained which will be instrumental in preventing any future attempt at escape on the part of our slaves.

The captured fugitives were owned severally by Mr. W. C. Shields, Mr. Eber Shaw, Mr. Guyot, two belonging to Capt. Gilbert's estate, and one owned in the country. The captain of the vessel, through whose instrumentality our citizens were saved from a loss of several thousand dollars, is entitled to the thanks of the community, which we think ought to be expressed in some tangible and valuable form.—Norfolk Herald, 12th inst.

Another Stampede.

Another party of negroes, some 15 in number disappeared from Norfolk, on Sunday morning last, and as soon as the fact became known, efforts were made to charter a steamer to go in pursuit of the Northern vessel. No steamer could be obtained, however, so, as soon as possible, some half dozen citizens, well armed and equipped, proceeded to Hampton, where the Pilot boat Reindeer, celebrated for speed, was chartered for the pursuit. The Argus says:

A very determined and persevering effort will be made to overtake and bring back the slaves, and those who have carried them off The chase and search will be vigorously kept up for two or three weeks, if necessary, along the coast, as far north at least as New Bedford. A suitable number of muskets, revolvers, &c., as well as a good supply of provisions, were taken by the pursuing party. If the coaster, with the slaves on board, should be found, and resistance shoud be made, there may be some hot work.

Last week two other slaves escaped, one of whom belonged to Mr. Seth March, who has gone to the North, determined if possible, to secure him and bring him back.—Richmond Whig, June 20, 1855.

UNDER GROUND RAIL ROAD.—Again we notice that this line is in operation, and we are led to believe that it has legions of officers from Massachusetts at every station. On Saturday night, a man owned by Mr. Turner, of the firm of Herman & Co., and negro woman and child of T. Bottimore, and Mr. S. March, and a slave of L. Stosser, were induced to take through tickets.—Norfolk Beacon, June 19, 1855.

From the Richmond Dispatch, June, 1855.

One Hundred Dollars Reward.

The above reward and all reasonable expenses will be paid for the apprehension and delivery to us, in Richmond, of a negro woman slave, named Maria, or, as she calls herself, Maria Perry. Maria is of medium statue, with a round face, skin about ginger bread color, a good set of teeth, full head of hair and a pleasing countenance. Her precise age is not recollected, but she is believed to be about 24 or 25 years old.

The Runaway Negroes,

Who escaped from the jail of Henrico county on the — day of April, 1855, were Frank, committed as the property of Henry Wickham, of Hanover, who is 5 feet 7 inches high, about 40 years old, black, stout built, and had on when last committed, a gray net cap, which he wore away; Gabriel, who calls himself Gabe, belongs to Mrs. Shelton, on Church Hill, was hired the present year to Edward West, in the lower end of Henrico; he is 5 feet 6 inches high, about 20 years old, black, stout built, short curly hair; he wore away a striped vest and a black satinet sack coat; and Minor, committed as the property of George Todd, of Caroline, is 5 feet 5 inches high, about 45 years old, very black, one lower front tooth out, black hair, a little grey and matted, black thin whiskers, and is very badly dressed.

One Hundred Dollars Reward.

Runaway from the subscriber, a black boy named Dick Bradley, about 5 feet 7 inches high, quite bow legged—about 28 years of age; he is well known by citizens and country people, as an oyster opener and waiter for years past in a Restaurant of this city, and left on Friday morning.

ALSO—A likely yellow boy named John Judah—about 22 years of age, and for the last eight months a waiter in my house. They both left together, and have probably made their way towards York River, and I am authorised by the owners to offer One Hundred Dollars reward for each, on their delivery to me,

R. W. ALLEN, Arbour,
Corner Main and 12th Streets.

Runaway.

Left the employment of Messrs. Williams & Ragland, (Brick-layers,) on Tuesday, the 22nd of May, a yellow Boy named Squire. He is about 20 years old, and 5 feet 8 inches high. It is likely that he is loitering about, in the upper end of the city. A liberal reward will be paid for his arrest and delivery to them, or to TAYLOR & WILLIAMS.

One Hundred Dollars Reward.

Runaway from the Coke Mines, in this county on Monday, the 9th ult., a negro named George —complexion black; 5 feet 6 inches in height; 22 years old; intelligent and sprightly, generally smiles when spoken to; mouth very small for a negro; raised in Charlottsville, and has been twice reclaimed as a runaway within the past year, once from Augusta jail and once from Rockingham. George will no doubt disown his name and ownership, as he has before done.

The above reward will be paid for his delivery at the Mines, or in Richmond, to
JNO. J. WERTH, Agent.

☞ A set of Missouri scoundrels came into Kansas City, and threatened the lives of several citizens. One innocent young man was clubbed over the shoulders, because he would not deny that he was an abolitionist. The landlord of the American Hotel was an object of attack, but he frightened away the crowd very easily by the use of a bowie knife. The citizens of the place were finally so outraged, that they arrested the villains, and they were to have a trial.

LYNCH LAW IN DONA ANA COUNTY—FOUR MEN HUNG.—We learn by a letter from the United States Marshal, that towards the last of March four men were hung in Dona (Utah) by a party of citizens for robbery. The facts, as far as we have been able to gather them, are as follows: Mr. Louis Greek, who lives in the town of Dona Ana, has a store in the Mesilla which was robbed, and that the robbers abused his wife. Four Mexicans were arrested on suspicion and confined in the County jail to answer at the term of the United States District Court then about to be held. The same night they were confined, however, they were taken from the jail by a party of men and hung upon a neighboring tree, where they were found the next morning. Such are substantially the facts of the case.

☞ A strange story, is current, and generally believed at Athens (Greece,) which may be recommended to the attention of the Anti-Slavery Society. It is confidently affirmed that a consular agent, who has since been appointed to a European station, bought some time back, an Arab boy in Egypt for 500 francs. He subsequently made a present of the boy to a lady of high station and influence—so high that it is considered inexpedient to name her—who has now got him. This story, in connection with the recent abduction of a Turkish girl by the authorities of Eubœa, who refuse to give her up, though ordered to do so by their government (at the request of the British Legation,) has caused a strong and painful excitement among the foreigners resident in Athens.

Extraordinary Premiums to Agents

For procuring Subscribers for

TICKETS AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,
IN PERHAM'S GREAT
100,000 GIFT ENTERPRISE!

The distribution of the Gifts being definitely fixed for JULY 5, 1855.

Any person sending $10 may deduct 10 per cent. or will receive 11 Tickets.

Each person sending $100 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Mammoth Gold Pen and Case, valued at $10.

Each person sending $200 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be

Presented with a Silver Watch, valued at $25.

Each person sending $300 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Gold Watch, valued at $50.

The person who shall send, before the 5th of July, the largest amount above $500, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Piano, valued at $200.

I have been induced to make the above liberal offers in order to remove a settled objection in the minds of your committee, to having the distribution take place while there remain in my hands tickets unsold, and for which cause they seem fit to defer the partition of the gifts, which was fixed for the 27th inst., to the 5th of July, as will be seen by reference to their proceedings, published below. I assure you that the postponement is as vexatious to me as it is to those who have purchased tickets. I therefore hope that each and every one now interested, will co-operate with me in the effort to dispose of the few thousand tickets remaining unsold, and thus advance the interests of the whole body of shareholders.

Respectfully yours,
J. PERHAM.

TO THE PATRONS OF

Perham's Third Gift Enterprise.

At a meeting of the Committee of Shareholders of Perham's Gift Enterprise, held at the Academy Hall, Broadway, on Wednesday Evening, April 18th, 1855, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted and ordered to be printed:—

Whereas, in view of the fact that several enterprises have been started and carried on with a seeming positive purpose of defrauding those who could be persuaded to purchase tickets therein; and such fraudulent proceedings have exerted an injurious influence in the sale of tickets in the enterprise of Mr. Perham; and whereas, it is deemed essential that all the tickets should be disposed of before the distribution takes place, be it therefore

Resolved, That in order to allow time for that purpose, the distribution be postponed until the 5th of July, at such place as may hereafter be determined on.

Resolved, That the committee have undiminished confidence in the integrity of Mr. Perham, and in his disposition to conform to all his published promises to his patrons.

ROBT. BEATTY, JR,
Chairman.

REMEMBER!

☞ Orders will now be received for Tickets in Perham's Fourth Gift Enterprise.

PERHAM'S GIFT ENTERPRISE.

The committee appointed by the Shareholders in this affair, to distribute the 100,000 Gifts amongst the ticket holders, have deferred the distribution until the 5th of July, on account of there remaining unsold some few thousands of tickets. Mr. Perham, ever anxious to meet the views of his patrons, offers extraordinary inducements to Agents to engage in the sale of the remaining tickets, so that there may be no mere delays, which are unquestionably as vexatious to him as to those who have purchased tickets in his enterprise. We commend the reading of his advertisement to our patrons, and hope that each and all will lend a helping hand to bring the matter to an early and satisfactory consummation.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchae of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the public, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid,)

J. N. STILL,
11 Brooklyn, L. I.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR.)
I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16TH VIC. CAP. 85. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. All packages, containing Soap, Candles, Pipes, Nails, Chains, Paints, Spices, Nuts, Vermiceli, Macaroni, Glass Tin, Canada Plates, Tins, Trunks and Jars containing Merchandise, and all other packages in which the goods are usually exposed for sale, or which necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold. And that the following Packages are to be exempt from payment of Duty, viz: Bales, Trusses, Cases covering Casks of Wines or Brandy in Wood, Cases and Casks containing Dry Goods, Hardware or Cutlery, Crates and Casks containing Glassware and Earthenware, Cases containing Bottled Wine or Bottled Spirits, and all other packages in which the goods are not usually exposed for sale, or which do not necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold.

By Command,

F. HINCKS, Inspector Gen.

IV. And be it enacted, That spirits and strong waters having the flavour of any kind of spirits or strong waters subject to higher duty than that imposed on Whiskey, shall be liable to the duty, imposed on the kind of spirits or strong waters of which they have the flavor as aforesaid, from whatever substance they may be distilled or prepared; but nothing in this Section shall be constructed as a declaration that spirits and Strong waters so flavored, were or were not before the passing of this Act subject to the duty imposed on those of which they have the flavor.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest: As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings.

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the greography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everythnig is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustraitive anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve no only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigaton; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one impeial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

Applications will be gratefully received for visiting Families or Parties at their own residences, in any part of this town.

Orders will be received for any of Fowlers & Wells' publications, wholesale or retail, and promptly attended to.

I consider written descriptions of inestimable value, for which reason I have given this department a more thorough investigation.

Orphans, Widows, and the Poor, will receive verbal examination free of charge.

Hours of attendance from 9 o'clock, a.m., until 10 o'clock, p.m.

WILLIAM PERSONS.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the rsquest of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with thest truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

THE

Universal Phonographer,

ORGAN OF THE

American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,

Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonotypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a Journal of THIRTY-TWO pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing, Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic Intelligence, Notices to Correspondents, Important Items of News, Biographies of Phonographers, "Gems of Expression," "Glances," Sketches, Eloquent Extracts, etc., etc., in four different methods of representing our language; Romantic Print, Phonetic Print, Phonetic Long-hand, and Phonetic Short-hand (in both of its styles). And all for ONE DOLLAR. Subscriptions should be prepaid and addressed thus: "ANDREW J. GRAHAM, Phonetic Depot, 358, Bleecker Street, New York."

☞ Any person desiring to become practically acquainted with the different departments of the Writing and Printing Reform, cannot better attain his or her wish than by sending the publisher $1 50 (the fifty cents in stamps), for which there will be furnished the necessary instruction book (pre-paid), and the Universal Phonographer for one year.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

CANADA FARMER,

A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

CONSTITUTION

OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 4th To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 5th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies', Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specfic object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PAY THE PRINTER.

As honest men attend and hear
The serious fact—the times are dear;
Who owes a bill, 'tis just as clear
As star-light in the winter,
That he should come without delay—
That's if he can—that bill to pay,
And ere he puts his purse away,
"Fork over" to the Printer.

The Printer's cheek is seldom red,
The fine machinery of his head
Is working when you are in bed,
Your true and faithful "Mentor;"
All day and night he wears his shoes,
And brains to furnish you with news,
But men of conscience ne'er refuse
To pay the toiling Printer.

'Tis known, or ought to be, by all
His dues are scattered, and they're small,
And if not paid, he's bound to fall
In debt—for fuel, bread, rent, or Perhaps his paper; then to square
Up with his help—a dodd'rd care
Bows down his head—now is it fair
That you don't pay the Printer.

His wife and little prattlers, too,
Are now depending upon you;
And if you pay the scriptures due,
Necessity can't stint her;
But if you don't, as gnaws the mole,
'Twill through your conscience eat a hole!
And brand the forehead thus "No soul!"
Of him who cheats the Printer.

The cats will mew between your feet,
The dogs will bite you on the street,
And every urchin that you meet,
Will roar with voice of Stentor,
'Look to your pockets—there he goes,
The chap that wears the Printer's clothes!
And proud, though every body knows
The grub, he gnawed the Printer!'

Be simply just, and don't disgrace
Yourself, but beg the "Lord of grace,"
To thaw that harden'd ley "case,"
That honesty may enter;
This done, man will with man act fair,
And all will have the "tin" to spare;
Then will the "editorial chair"
Support a well-paid Printer.

Description of Chatham, C. W.

The Towns of Chatham and Chatham North form one Municipality, are at the junction of the four Townships of Harwich, Raleigh, Chatham and Dover East, and contain upwards of 3500 inhabitants. There are 1 Episcopal, 1 Roman Catholic, 3 Presbyterian, (1 free,) 3 Methodist, and 2 Baptist Churches. A new Episcopal Church will be erected in the course of next year on Head St., where a new Methodist Church is now in the course of erection. A Grammar School is now built at a cost of £1450, and a Central School is already erected at a cost of £1150, and there are 3 Female, and 3 Common Schools, 3 steam Engine Manufactories, 5 steam Flouring Mills, 1 steam Tannery, 4 steam Saw Mills, 1 steam Plaining Machine, 1 steam Shingle Factory, 1 steam Cabinet Shop, and 4 other Cabinet Shops, 1 Carriage Manufactory, and 3 Waggon Shops, 2 steam Founderies, 2 steam Carding and Fulling Establishments, 3 Distilleries, 2 Breweries, 20 Dry Goods Stores, 50 Grocery and Provision Stores, 2 Bank Agencies, and all other advantages and conveniences looked for in a prosperous town, including 3 Printing Establishments. Drug Shops, Livery Stables, &c. &c. Steamers and Sailing Vessels belong to this port, and the heaviest class Vessels may freight here for Liverpool, and direct weekly connection can be kept up between this port and Montreal, and the Liverpool Steamer. Chatham is on the main line of the Great Western Railway, and enjoys Telegraphic Communication with the States and the Provinces. 54 miles of Gravel and Plank Road are in the course of construction into Chatham, by which all the great tributaries of trade in the country will be directed to it. Lake Erie with its fine waters and high banks is just 12 miles from Chatham, to which a fine gravel road leads in a short time. A more agreeable place for summer residence is not to be found on any of our fine lakes, and from this point the city of Cleveland is only 60 miles distant. The County of Kent, from the wonderful fertility of its soil, and the great extent and value of its timber, will, on Reciprocity with the States taking place, become the first in agricultural importance. As the "Garden of Canada," (as it has always been justly styled,) it produces in perfection the most delicate Fruits, such as the Peach, Plum, Apricot, Nectarine, Pear and Grapes. In its water advantages it is unrivalled, having Lake Erie along its full extent on the south, the River Thames running through its centre, and the River Sydenham as its northern boundary, and at no greater distance than 16 miles from the Thames. The fisheries of Lake Erie and the latter River are unsurpassed by any in Western Canada. Chatham is one of the most flourishing towns in the Province, as its Custom duties show. The year ending 5th January, 1853, gave £2656 9s. 7d.; that ending 5th January, 1854, gave £5791 4s 11d., and the last Quarter, ending 5th July last, has given £1339 3s. 11d., and this, although goods arriving in this place by Railway, were entered largely both at Hamilton and Windsor. The value of imports from the States, irrespective of enteries at the two above mentioned places for the last quarter ending 5th July last, was £13,170 12s The municipality have appropriated £4000 for the general improvement and embellishment of the town. Finally gravelled streets, (and lighted with gas.) will be among the signs of its progress in the next two years. An excellent brick Market and Town Hall are among its public buildings, and the health of the place is not surpassed by that of any town in the Province; it stands 25 feet above the level of Lake St. Clair, and 20 feet above that of the river Thames. Large numbers of vessels visit this port, and there is no more favorable place than Chatham in the country for the construction of vessels of the best class. The exports of lumber for this year are estimated to reach £65,000. The wheat of this country is superior to the best wheat of the United States, and may be set down at an average of 30 bushels to the acre, and along the banks of the Thames at not less than 35. Both the town and country afford great inducements to settlement, and the latter gives the best opportunity for purchasing both farms and wild lands; within the past year property has risen 100 per cent, and will no doubt give a continual and large increase each year to come. In addition to the present Hotels of the town, it is intended to erect a joint stock one.

The Farmer of Upper Canada, as distinguished from the Early Settlers.

There is perhaps no class in the world who live better—I mean who have a greater abundance of the comforts of life than men having cleared farms, and who know how to make a proper use of them, in Upper Canada. The imports of the country show that they dress not only well but in many things expensively. You go into a Church or meeting house in any part of the Province, which has been settled for fifteen or twenty years, and you are struck at once with the fabrics, as well as the style of dresses worn by both sexes, but especially by the young. The same shawls, and bonnets, and gowns which you see in cities, are worn by the women, whilst the coats of the men are undistinguishable from those worn by professional men and merchants in towns. A circumstance which I witnessed some years ago in travelling from Simcoe to Brantford—two towns in the interior of the Province—will serve to convey an idea of the taste as well as the means of enjoyment of these people. At an ordinary Methodist meeting house in the centre of a rural settlement, and ten miles from a village or town, there were twenty-three pleasure carriages, double and single, standing in waiting. The occasion was a Quarterly Meeting, and these were the conveyances of farmers who come to attend it. Yet twenty years before, and many of these people were working as laborers, and were not possessed of a pair of oxen. Twenty years before, and these things exceeded even their brightest dreams of prosperity.

To persons not practically acquainted with Upper Canada, these evidences, not only of comfort but of considerable refinement may appear extraordinary, because mere rude husbandry, just emerging from a wilderness, could hardly be expected to produce such results. Wealth in agriculture, like wealth in every other occupation, is usually the offspring of skill and judgment, as well as of labor and perseverance. But it is a remarkable fact that the farmers of Upper Canada have opportunities of improvement, and of enlarging and correcting their views, beyond what are enjoyed by many of their class even in England. And this arises from the circumstance of the population being made up of so many varieties. The same neighborhood has not unfrequently a representative of the best farming skill of Yorkshire; of the judicious management and agricultural experience of the Lothians, and of the patient industry and perseverance of Flanders. In a country so peopled the benefits of travel are gained without the necessity of going away from home. Other countries, in fact, send their people to teach Canadians, instead of Canadians having to go to other countries to learn. A thousand experiences are brought to their doors, instead of their having to visit a thousand doors to acquire them. Nor is the advantage of this happy admixture of population altogether on the Canadian; for, whilst he gleans from the old countryman his skill and his science, he teaches him in return, how to rely upon himself in emergencies and difficulties inseperable from a new country,—how to be a carpenter when a storm blows down a door, and there is no carpenter to be had; and how to be an undismayed wheelright when a waggon breaks down in the midst of a forest, and there is no one either to instruct or to assist him. The one, in short, imparts to a comparatively rude people the knowledge and skill of an old and highly civilized country; the other teaches skilled labour how to live in a new land. The consequence is, the old countryman of tact becomes, in all that relates to self-reliance and enterprise, a capital Canadian in a few years; whilst the Canadian, in all that partakes to skillful industry, becomes an excellent Englishman. As a natural result of this, there is scarcely an improvement effected in English farming which does not find its way into Canada soon after; nor is there an agricultural implement, which can be adapted to Canadian soil, that is not immediately copied or imported. And Agricultural Societies have sprung up and prospered in the country, to an extent hardly paralleled in any other part of the world. The result is that Durham cattle may be seen at the very verge of civilization in Western Canada; that there is scarcely a neighborhood where may not be found the descendants of Berkshire pigs, nor a village that has not horses which exhibit all the fine peculiarities of the best breeds of England and Scotland. That a country so circumstanced, with a fine climate, and with abundance of land for those who had the energy to clear and cultivate it, should have enjoyed great prosperity, is really not so much a wonder as it would be a matter of surprise if it had not had such success.

The same causes which have produced these results upon agriculture have also had an eminently beneficially effect upon society The settler who nobly pushes back the giant wilderness, and hews out a home for himself upon the conquered territory, has necessarily but a bony hand and a rough visage to present to advancing civilization. His children are timid, and wild, and uncouth. But a stranger comes in; buys the little improvement on the next lot to him; has children who are educated, and a wife with refined tastes—for such people mark, in greater or less degree, every settlement in Upper Canada. The necessities of the new comer soon bring about an acquaintance with the [illegible]; but the children know not the conventional rules of society, and, happily, are governed by their innocence in their friendship. So they play together, go to school in company; and thus, imperceptable to themselves, are the tastes and manners of the educated imparted to the rude, and the energy and fortitude of the latter are infused in their more efficient companions. Manly but ill-tutored success is thus taught how to enjoy its gains, whilst respectable poverty is instructed how to better its condition. That pride occasionally puts itself to inconvenience to prevent these pleasant results, my experience of Canada forces me to admit; and that the jealousy and vanity of mere success sometimes views with unkindness the manner and habit of reduced respectability—never perhaps more exacting than when it is poorest—I must also acknowledge. But that the great law of progress and the influence of free institutions, break down these exceptional feelings and prejudices, is apparent to every close observer of Canadian society. Where the educated and refind undergo the changes incident to laborious occupations—for the constant use of the axe and the plough alters men's feelings as well as their appearance—and where rude industry is also changed by the success which gives it the benefit of education, it is impossible for the two classes not to meet. As the one goes down—at least in its occupations—it meets the other coming up by reason of its success, and both eventually occupy the same pedestal. I have seen this social problem worked out over again in Upper Canada, and have never known the result different. Pride, in America, must "stoop to conquer;" rude industry rises always.

The manner of living of the Upper Canadian farmer may be summed up in a few words. He has plenty, and he enjoys it. The native Canadians almost universally, and a large portion of the old country people, sit at the same table with their servants or laborers. They [illegible] and many of them thrice a day: it being apparently more a matter of taste than of economy as to the number of times. Pork is what they chiefly consume. There being a great abundance of fruit, scarcely a cleared farm is without an orchard; and it is to be found preserved in various ways on every farmer's table. Milk is in great abundance, even in the early settlers' houses, for where there is a little pasture there are sure to be large woods, and "brouse," or the tops of the branches of trees supply the place of hay. The sweetest bread which I have eaten in America, I have eaten in farmers' houses of Upper Canada. They usually grind the "shorts" with the flour for home consumption, and as their wheat is among the finest in the world, the bread is at once wholesome and exceedingly delicious. Were I asked what is the leading characteristic of the Upper Canadian farmer, I should unquestionably answer PLENTY Plenty reigns in his granary, plenty is exhibited in his farm yard, plenty gleams from his corn fields, and plenty smiles in the faces of his children. But let it not be imagined that this plenty is gained without continuous labor, and the excercise of judgment and intelligence. Many of the finest farms in Upper Canada have passed out of the hands of those whose hands won them from the forest; and many more are exhausted and unproductive, through injudicious management, indolence, or inattention; and in some instances the very laborers on the farms which have been sold and wasted by the second generation, have been able to purchase them. Industry literally converted the labourer into the lord, whilst extravagance and indolence reduced the lord to the laborer. Nor have old country people, who brought habits of extravagance with them, or who knew not how to work, and refused to learn, fared much better. For labor, which achieves, as I have shown, so much in Canada, may, by reason of its great cost, be proportionally ruinous, if it is injudicially employed or misdirected. It is like the sails, which, if the steering be good, may fill and work beautifully; but if the helm be ill managed, may bring every thing to a stand still, or endanger the whole ship.

Remarkable Occurrence.

A circumstance of a somewhat extraordinary character, occurred a short time since in one of the flourishing towns of the Midland counties. A clergyman died, and his wife and daughters on the third day after his decease, recollecting that no likeness remained of the once cherished husband and father, it was agreed, ere the grave closed over him, that the body should be unshrouded and a portrait taken. A young lady of some professional celebrity was engaged for the task. She, with the assistance of the attendant, took off the shroud, and placed the body in the requisite position; but other duties requiring the artist's attention, the sketch was deferred till noon. About twelve o'clock, at the foot of the bed, the lady commenced and went through an hour's work on this image of death. At this stage of the proceedings, by some unaccountable motion, the head of the death-like figure fell on one side. Nothing daunted, the artist carefully took the head to replace it, when lo! the eyes opened, and staring her full in the face, the dead inquired—"Who are you?" The young "professional" without trepidation, took the bandage from the head, and rubbed his neck. He immediately saw the shroud, and laughed immoderately. The artist quietly called the family—their joy may be imagined, but not described. That evening, he who had lain three days in his shroud, bemoaned by mother and sisters with agonising tears, gladdened their hearts by taking his accustomed place at their tea table, and is now making an excursion in North Wales.—Bedford Times.

A Word to the Ladies.

The suggestions contained in the subjoined paragraphs are so proper, says the 'Leader,' that we make no apology for laying them before our readers. To anticipate a lady's recognition in public is that kind of bad breeding which amounts to impudence. And a lady who does not know this, and in consequence, considers herself a piece of fragid gentility to be stared at and bowed to, will be apt to have few acquaintances in public worthy the name of gentleman. It is the lady's part if she desires to be recognised, to give the necessary information. For want of general observation of this rule, it is manifest, that our society presents a remarkably frozen aspect. Acquaintances meet and pass with a vacant stare, as much as to say to each other: Relax one of those rigid features at your peril. The countenance of each party an on-looker might observe, has, on such fortuitous meetings, something savage in it. It is apparent that their eyes encounter each other with pain. Neither are probably indifferent to the other's appearance. But in too many cases the [illegible] expects that it is the gentleman's part to survey her as he would a statue of Minerva: rise his hat with a simper on his [illegible]ish countenance, and feel deeply grateful, that the goddess was serenely passive. Now, this mandarin style of civily, apart from the mere question of etiquette—for that if after all the least important consideration—is entirely soulless. It makes people strangers who would be all the better for knowing each other. It throws over society a mantle of ice. It induces selfishness. It makes one think more of himself, than of what is due to others.

In short, although apparently a very small matter, considered in itself, it has an influence upon the whole of our social intercourse; tends to foster hypocrisy; and to create estrangements. The subjoined paragraphs we copy from the Kingston British Whig:—

1. Before you bow to a lady in the street, permit her to decide whether you may do so or not, by at least a look of recognition.

2. When your companion bows to a lady, you should do the same. When a gentleman bows to a lady in your company, always bow to him in return.

 Nothing is so ill understood in America as those conventional laws of society, so well understood and practised in Europe. Ladies complain that gentlemen pass them in the streets unnoticed, when in fact the fault arises from their own breach of politeness. It is their duty to do the amiable first, for it is a privilege which ladies enjoy of choosing their own associates or acquaintances. No gentleman likes the risk of being cut in the street by a lady through a premature salute. Too many ladies it would seem, "don't know their trade" of politeness. Meeting ladies in the streets, whom one has casually met in company, they never bow unless he bows first, and when a gentleman never departs from the rule of good breeding, except occasionally, by way of experiment, his acquaintances do not multiply, but he stands probably charged with rudeness. The rule is plain. A lady must be civil to a gentleman in whose company she is casually brought; but a gentleman is not upon this to presume upon acquaintanceship the first time he afterwards meets her in the street. If it be her will, she gives some token of recognition, when the gentleman may bow; otherwise he must pass on, and consider himself a stranger. No lady need hesitate to bow to a gentleman, for he will promptly and politely answer, even if he has forgotten his fair saluter. None but a brute can do otherwise—should he pass on rudely, his character is declared, and there is cheap riddance. Politeness, or good breeding is like law, "the reason of things."—Prototype.

Thrilling Adventure in India.

During a residence of some months at a station on the Malabar coast of Hindostan, I frequently went into the forest alone, for the purpose of amusing myself by the great variety of game, but seldom ventured so far as to prevent my returning before night. Attended by a native, I one day proposed ascending a mountain, whose blue summit could scarcely be distinguished from the town, rising afar in the wilderness above the lesser heights of the great range. We started at daybreak, and plunged directly into the forest, in a direction toward the object of our expedition. I carried a heavy rifle, and wore a brace of pistols and a long hunting-knife in my girdle. My companion wore nothing but a pair of unshapely shoes, made of untanned leather, and a garment of leopard-skin which descended to the knees was fastened at the waist by a belt, in which was placed a heavy knife, with a curved blade, which I observed was very sharp and bright; he carried no other weapon, except a short fowling-piece, loaded with ball. He was an athletic and bold-looking fellow, acquainted with all the methods of hunting and combating all of the fierce prowlers of the wilds, and possessed of an uncommon degree of sagacity, coolness, and physical strength. These were the qualities I desired, for I had been informed that the mountain we had been in quest of was considered by the natives as a dangerous place, even for the most skillful and daring hunter, being full of rocky caves, inaccessable to any thing but the beasts to whom they afforded shelter; and the country in its vicinity being covered with dense forests and dark tangled jungles, into which the foot of man had never ventured.

As we approached the mountain our progress indeed became more and more difficult. Thick bushes and fallen timber frequently obstructed our way. Nearly every appearance of game ceased here. The smallest animal had fled this region, or had fallen prey to the more lordly species of the brute creation. Occasionally we heard the crashing of the boughs, and caught a glimpse of some moving object in the dark recesses of the thickets, or saw the spotted folds of the cobra di capella, and other fearful snakes, glike away and disappear among the leaves and thick bush, as though startled at our approach. But thus far we had proceeded so cautiously as not to disturb these dangerous creatures, or attract their attention. My companion would frequently pause, in a listening attitude, and cast his piercing glance into the tree tops which met above us and completely shut out the light of day, as though he expected to see the crouching tiger or the anaconda, ready to dart upon us; and yet there was no expression of fear in the fellow's countenance—it was the caution of the true hunter.

We had accomplished nearly one half of the ascent, when we were stopped by a wall of rock, perpendicular in many places to the height of several hundred feet, and running across the face of the mountain, to the right and left, until the eye lost its curve on either side. Seeing no way of passing over, under, or through the obstacle, I directed the native to follow the ledge a short distance toward the left, in order to find an opening, while I took the right. I proceeded some distance, and found a break in the rock through which I thought we might make our way to the top. Trees had grown up in this opening, and bushes had sprung from every crevice along its sides, filling it up so completely that only an occasional glimpse could be had of the sky through the top, which appeared no wider than one's hand.

While contemplating this singular arrangement, the native made his appearance, and after attentively considering the opening, said he could make the ascent. At this moment a sudden current of air, bursting through the crevice, parted the bushes and disclosed to us, a little beyond, a spot where the great rock seemed no longer entire. We had proceeded along this passage, which was nearly blocked up by the trees and bush, until we reached this point, and were convinced at once the ascent would be difficult. The crevice widened here, and it struck me in particular that it seemed no longer a rent, but a natural opening, which grew gradually wider as it ran farther into the mountain, and the sides of which were composed of earth and rock of various dimensions, some projecting nearly or quite across the fissure. The side which we proposed to ascend was not quite perpendicular at this spot, and its broken appearance, and the shrubs growing from it, made our success apparently feasible.

Impelled by curiosity and a desire to know more of this singular opening, I determined to penetrate farther into it, while my companion tried the ascent. I proceeded some distance, and noticed that the passage seemed to grow no wider; but the vegetation became thinner at every step, and at length ceased almost entirely. Here, on looking up, I saw that the crevice was closed some fifty feet above, and before me was darkness, in which I dared not penetrate. While looking with a sort of horror into this dark chasm which seemed to lead directly toward the heart of the mountain, I heard a rustling sound proceeding from its recesses, and started back appalled at the thought of having entered, perhaps, the very den of the fierce tiger or the dread lion. The noise was repeated, and hastily turning, I retraced my steps as silently and rapidly as possible. I cast my eyes up among the rocks to discover my companion, but found that I had passed the spot where he commenced climbing, and as I turned again to go back, I saw through the bushes an enormous serpent glide slowly toward me, along that part of the passage I had traversed. He did not seem to be aware of the presence of any foe or victim, but crept along with his body half concealed among the bushes, and his head close to the ground, until arriving under the native, and probably alarmed at some noise the latter made, he then reared himself several feet from the ground, and beholding the above man, gave a loud and terrible hiss, and quick as lightning coiled himself around the nearest tree, and ascended to its first boughs. The sight paralyzed every mental and physical faculty I possessed. I had no life but in the horror of gazing upon this frightful monster—horror which was greatly increased by the peril in which it placed my companion. He meanwhile heard the terrible hissing below him, and became fully aware of the extent of his danger. He had climbed forty or fifty feet, and was very nearly as high as the top of the tree which the serpent was ascending in pursuit of him.

For ten or fifteen feet above where he now stood, the rock was perpendicular, and afforded no facilities for climbing, except its crevices and the bushes that grew from them. Up he went, however, with incredible agility, until within a few feet of a spot where the wall seemed to jut back, forming a sort of shelf; here nothing seemed within his reach by which he might raise himself higher, and for a moment he paused. Above him, and quite out of his reach, was a decayed root, which did not look strong enough to sustain his weight, and above that was a strong bush which, if he could but grasp, he felt certain of being able to reach the shelf, where he would have some chance of defending himself, and he observed the top of the great opening was not far above this, although a closer examination would have shown him that it was impossible to reach it from his present position, for the wall above the shelf, and on either side, presented a solid, smooth front, without shrub or crevice. He heard a quick hustling in the tree below, a branch of which ran very near him, and again that sharp hiss told him that his frightful enemy was almost in reach of him. With the energy that desparation gives in such moments he made a spring up the perpendicular face of the rock. If he missed his aim, or the root broke, unless he could seize the bush above it he was lost, for he would inevitably fall, and the serpent would seize him as soon as within his reach. The root did break almost an instant after his weight was upon it, but the agile native had managed to lay his hand on the bush, and after another powerful effort he was upon the shelf. Seeing it was impossible to climb farther, he turned, and settling his back firmly against the rock, drew his knife and fixed his eyes upon the enemy.

I saw the latter [illegible] the uncoiled of the strongest of the high limbs, which would bring him very near his victim, and I may add [illegible] I have related had passed so rapidly before my eyes that I scarcely had time for action of any sort. The serpent had ascended the tree so quickly until concealed by its branches that I had no time to fire, but now that he had exposed himself, I determined to do so, although the shot might endanger the native. The frightful monster, in his revolutions around the limb, paused whenever his head came above it, and fixing his burning eyes upon his expected prey, made another turn around the limb, and each time came nearer to its extremity. As his head came fairly in view I fired, aiming at his neck. The report of the rifle in this pent-up place was tremendous, and instantly turning his head toward the tree, the serpent twisted himself in a hard knot upon the limb. I distinctly heard his blood dropping on the leaves near my feet. I thought I had done the business for him, but was mistaken, for in a moment, hissing in anger, he uncoiled himself and again advanced along the branch.

My companion had left his fowling-piece near where I stood, and I seized it and fired a second time, but without effect. He reached the end of the limb which, though running horizontally, was a continuance of the main body of the tree, and having been broken near the shelf, was strong enough to bear his weight and bend very little. Here with his head flattened and his arched and swollen crest glowing like fire, he prepared to spring upon his prize. The blood streamed from the wound in his neck, and flowing down crimsoned the bright scales, but he seemed to be but little injured. His burning and dilating eyes were fixed upon the native, and his forked tongue darted like an incessant flame from his mouth. The man was prepared for him—the [illegible] but his situation was a terrible one.

At this moment a dark shadow fell upon him. He looked up and in amazement beheld a lion of great size standing upon the brink of the opening, some ten feet above him, with his eyes fixed on the other side, and evidently intending to cross. A hiss from below caught his ear, and dropping his head quickly between his legs, he lifted his mane, and with a loud roar sprang fiercely at the native, who avoided him by shrinking close to the rock, and as he came within reach of the shelf, he plunged the knife in his side. As the lion recovered his leap and turned upon his foe, I saw two or three coils fly from the limb like rings of fire, and in an instant one of them was around the shaggy neck of the lordly beast, and the fangs of the serpent were fastened just above his eyes. He was dragged struggling from the shelf, and the serpent retaining his hold upon the limb, they swung heavily against the body of the tree. The joints of the serpent stretched to their utmost tension, and the limb bent and cracked with the weight it sustained, but he firmly kept hold, and drew the cord about the neck of the struggling lion as tight as a bungsman's knot. But the mighty beast was not to be overcome. With one of his strong paws he grasped the snake above the head, and turning seized that part in his mouth, crushing bones and flesh, and grinding his teeth in fury when they met. The cords upon the limb now relaxed, and they fell heavily upon the ground, fighting in a heap, and whirling the dry leaves up in a clowd with their fiery energy.

I ran up the path which the native had selected before, and was soon joined by him. With little difficulty we reached the top of the opening, and turned to look at the strange battle below. But it was over. The huge serpent lay bloody and motionless at the foot of the tree, and the victorious lion disappeared among the bushes in the direction of the fissure. He had received some severe wounds, and I doubt not his bones ached from the great stress of the serpent's folds. Our attempted ascent of the mountain ended for that day, and we quickly wended our way homeward.

The Very Latest News.

Under the head of "the very latest news," by the Baltic, the New York Herald, of Saturday, gives the following:—

It is rumoured in Paris that the preparations of the Black Sea squadron are not for the attack on Odessa, but to make a bold dash at the harbor of Sebastopol, with 100 ships and 40,000 men, while a simultaneous attack is made from the land.

Powder Mill Explosion at Wilmington.

On last Friday morning, Aug. 10, a tremendous explosion took place at Mr Garesche's powder mill. Three buildings blew up, killing some five or six workmen, and wounding several others. It is supposed the powder was fired by a Frenchman, in the packing room, who was in the habit of smoking a pipe there. The practice had been prohibited by Mr. Garesche.—Olive Branch.

First Locomotive in Iowa.

The Milwauki News says, that on Thursday, the 15th July, an engine was run for the first time on the Mississippi and Missouri railroad, the eastern termination of which is at Davenport. This is the first time that a locomotive has been put in operation in the State of Iowa, and the event was celebrated with eclat.

Kidnapping.

The Editor of the Wachman announces to his readers, the past week, that—"A colored boy named David H. Jackson, about fifteen years of age, living with Mr. John B. McKay, a farmer of Chichester, Delaware county, was enticed away from his home, on Friday afternoon, by a gentlemanly-looking man who wore spectacles. The boy was last seen with this man in the cars bound towards Baltimore, and it is believed that ere this he is in a slave State."—Olive Branch.

From Philadelphia.

Correspondence of the New York Tribune.

PHILADELPHIA, July 30, 1855.

As the public have not been made acquainted with the facts and particulars respecting the agency of Mr. Passmore Williamson and others, in relation to the slave case now agitating this city, and especially as the poor slave mother and her two sons have been so grossly represented, I deem it my duty to lay the facts before you, for publication or otherwise, as you may think proper.

On Wednesday afternoon, week, at 4½ o'clock, the following note was placed in my hands by a colored boy whom I had never before seen, to my recollection:

"Ma. Sir. S. Will you come down to Bloodgood's Hotel as soon as possible as there are three gentlemen here and they want this [illegible] to go with them, on his way to New York.

The note was without date, and the signature so indistinctly written as not to be understood by me, having evidently been penned in a moment of haste.

Without delay I ran with the note to Mr P. Williamson's office, Seventh and Arch, found him at his desk, and gave it to him, and after reading it he remarked that he could not go down, as he had to go to Harrisburg that night on business—but he advised me to go, and to get the names of the slaveholder and the slaves, in order to telegraph to New York to have them arrested there, as no time remained to obtain a writ of habeas corpus here.

It could not have been two minutes in Mr. Williamson's office before starting in haste for the wharf. To my surprise, however, when I reached the wharf, there I found Mr. W., his mind having undergone a sudden change; he was soon on the spot.

I saw three or four colored persons in the hall, at Bloodgood's, none of whom I recognized except the boy who brought me the note. Before having time for making inquiry some one said they had gone to the boat. "Get their description," said Mr. W. to myself. I instantly inquired of one of the colored persons for the desired description, and in a single sentence was told that she was "a tall, dark woman, with two little boys."

Mr W. and myself ran on board of the boat, looked among the passengers on the first deck, but saw them not. "They are upon the second deck," an unknown voice uttered. In a second we were in their presence. We approached the anxious looking slave-mother with her two boys on her left-hand; close on her right sat an ill-favored white man having a cane in his hand which I took to be a sword-cane. (As to its being a sword-cane, however, I might have been mistaken.)

The first words to the mother were: "Are you travelling?" "Yes," was the prompt answer. "With whom?" Nodding her head toward the ill-favored man, signifying with him. Fidgeting-on his seat, he said something, exactly what I do not now recollect. In reply I remarked: "Do they belong to you sir?" "Yes, they are in my charge," was his answer. Turning from him to the mother and her sons, in substance, and word for word, as near as I can remember, the following remarks were earnestly though calmly addressed by the individuals who rejoiced to meet them on free soil, and who felt unmistakably assured that they were justified by the laws of Pennsylvania as well as the law of God, in informing them of their rights:

"You are entitled to your freedom according to the laws of Pennsylvania, having been brought into the State by your owner. If you prefer freedom to slavery, as we suppose everybody does, you have the chance to accept it now. Act calmly—don't be frightened by your master—you are as much entitled to your freedom as we are, or as he is—be determined and you need have no fears but you will be protected by the law. Judges have time and again decided cases in this city and State similar to yours in favor of freedom! Of course, if you want to remain a slave with your master, we cannot force you to leave; we only want to make you sensible of your rights. Remember, if you lose this chance you may never get such another," &c.

This advice to the woman was made in the hearing of a number of persons present, white and colored; and one elderly white gentleman of genteel address, who seemed to take much interest in what was going on, remarked that they would have the same chance for their freedom in New-Jersey and New York as they then had—seeming to sympathize with the woman, &c.

During the few moments in which the above remarks were made, the slaveholder frequently interrupted—said she understood all about the laws making her free, and her right to leave if she wanted to; but contended that she did not want to leave—that she was on a visit to New York to see her friends—afterward wished to return to her three children whom she left in Virginia, from whom it would be HARD to separate her. Furthermore, he diligently tried to constrain her to say that she did not want to be interfered with—that she wanted to go with him—that she was on a visit to New York—had children in the South, &c.; but the woman's desire to be free was altogether too strong to allow her to make a single acknowledgment favorable to his wishes in the matter. On the contrary, she repeatedly said, distinctly and firmly, "I am not free, but I want my "freedom" ALWAYS always wanted to be "free!! but he holds me.

In the slaveholder's remarks, after saying that she belonged to him, he said that she was free! Again he said that he was going to give her her freedom, &c. When his eyes would be off of hers, such kindling feelings as her eyes exhibited indicative of her entreaty that we should not forsake her and her little ones, in their weakness, it had never been my lot to witness before, under any circumstances.

The last bell tolled! The last moment for further delay passed! The arm of the master being slightly touched, accompanied with the words, "Come"—and she instantly arose—"go along—go along," said some, who sympathized, to the boys, at the same time taking hold of their arms. By this time the parties were fairly moving toward the narrow stairway leading to the deck below. Instantly on their starting, the slaveholder rushed at the woman and her children, to prevent their leaving; and, if I am not mistaken, he simultaneously took hold of the woman and Mr Williamson, when resistance on his part caused Mr. W. to take hold of him and set him aside quickly.

The passengers were gazing all round, but none interfered in behalf of the slaveholder except one man whom I took to be another slaveholder. He said harshly, "Let them alone; they are his property!" The youngest boy, about 7 years of age—too young to know what these things meant—cried "Massa John! Massa John!" The eldest boy, 11 years of age, took the matter more dispassionately, and the mother quite calmly. The mother and her sympathizers all moved down the stairs together in the presence of quite a number of spectators on the first deck and on the wharf, all of whom, as far as I was able to discern, seemed to look upon the whole affair with the greatest indifference. The women and children were assisted, but not forced to leave. Nor were there any violence or threatenings as I saw or heard. The only word that I did hear from any, of an objectionable character, was: "Knock "him down; knock him down!" but who uttered it or who was meant I knew not, nor have I since been informed. However, if it was uttered by a colored man, I regret it, as there was not the slightest cause for such language, especially as the sympathies of the spectators and citizens seemed to justify the course pursued.

While passing off of the wharf and down Delaware-av. to Dock-st., and up dock to Front, where a carriage was procured, the slaveholder was in the company and one police officer, if no more.

The youngest boy on being put in the carriage was told that he was "a fool for crying so after Massa' John," who would sell him if he ever caught him. Not another whine was heard on the subject.

The carriage drove down town slowly, the horses being fatigued and the weather being intensely hot; the inmates were put out on Tenth st.—not at any house—after which they soon found hospitable friends and quietude. The excitement of the moment having passed by, the mother seemed very cheerful, and rejoiced greatly that herself and boys had been, as she thought, so "providentially delivered from the house of bondage!" For the first time in her life she could look upon herself and children and feel free!

Having felt the iron in her heart for the best half of her days—having been sold with her children on the auction block—having had one of her children sold far away from her without hope of ever seeing him again—she very naturally and wisely concluded to go to Canada, fearing that if she remained in this city—as some assured her she could do with entire safety—that she might again find herself in the clutches of the tyrant from whom she had fled.

But, a few items of what she related concerning the character of her master. Within the last two years he had sold all his slaves—between thirty and forty in number—having purchased the present ones in that space of time.

She said that before leaving Washington, coming on the cars, and at his father-in-law's, in this city, a number of persons had told him that in bringing his slaves into Pennsylvania they would be free. When told at his father-in-law's, as she overheard it, that he "could not have done a worse thing," &c., he replied that "Jane would not leave him."

As much, however, as he affected to have such implicit confidence in Jane, he scarcely allowed her to be out of his presence a moment while in this city. To use Jane's own language, he was "on her heels every minute," fearing that some one might get to her ears the sweet music of freedom. By the way, Jane had it deep in her heart before leaving the South, and was bent on succeeding in New York, if disappointed in Philadelphia.

At Bloodgood's, after having been belated and left by the 2 o'clock train, while waiting for the 5 o'clock line, his appetite tempted him to take a hasty dinner. So after placing Jane where he thought she would be pretty secure from "evil communications" from the coloured waiters, and after giving her a double counselling, he made his way to the table; did not remain but a little while however before leaving to look after Jane; finding her composed, looking over a banister near where he left her, he returned to the table again and finished his meal.

But, alas, for the slaveholder! Jane had her "top eye open," and in that brief space had appealed to the sympathies of a person whom she ventured to trust, saying "I and my children are slaves, and we want liberty!" I am not certain, but suppose that person, in the goodness of his heart, was the cause of the note being sent to the Anti-Slavery office, and hence the result.

As to her going on to New York to see her friends, and wishing to return to her three children in the South, and his going to free her, &c., Jane declared repeatedly and very positively, that there was not a particle of truth in what her master said on these points. The truth is she had not the slightest hope of freedom through any act of his. She had only left one boy in the South, who had been sold far away, where she scarcely ever heard from him, indeed never expected to see him any more.

In appearance, Jane is tall and well formed, high and large forehead, of genteel manners, chestnut color, and seems to possess, naturally, uncommon good sense, though of course she has never been allowed to learn to read.

Thus I have given as truthful a report as I am capable of doing, of Jane and the circumstances connected with her deliverance.

W. STILL.

P. S.—Of the five colored porters who promptly appeared with warm hearts throbbing in sympathy with the mother and her children, too much praise cannot be expressed on their behalf. In the present case they acted nobly, whatever may be said of their general character, of which I know nothing. How human hearts who have ever tasted oppression, could have acted differently under the circumstances I cannot conceive.

Passmore Williamson.

We rejoice to learn that measures are being taken to hold a meeting in Philadelphia to express the public sentiment in regard to the shameless outrage perpetrated on one of her most upright and peaceable citizens. Throughout the Free States, there is but one feeling in relation to the imprisonment of Williamson; it is looked upon as the height of cruelty and injustice, and men are astonished at the indifference with which the matter is treated in Philadelphia. The press has had little to say on the subject; we believe only one paper has had the courage to condemn the act; still, this may be no criterion of popular sentiment in that city. We cannot believe it is—the citizens of Philadelphia owe it to themselves to speak out in tones of thunder in condemnation of the high-handed and outrageous conduct of Judge Kane. Why is Williamson in prison? What crime has he committed? How long is he to be confined on a charge of contempt? If men are to be sent to prison on such a charge, and during the pleasure of a Judge, it is time the fact was known. The people of Philadelphia should demand the immediate release of Williamson. He is guilty of no offence; why should not he be liberated?—N. Y. Tribune.

The Philadelphia Slave Case.

A correspondent in Philadelphia, in a letter dated Aug. 9, says:—

'The Grand Jury found true bills yesterday against Passmore Williamson and the five colored men for riot and assault and battery; also against William Still, another colored man, clerk in the Anti-Slavery office. Mr. Still, on hearing of his indictment, went forward voluntarily, and entered bonds for his appearance. J. M. McKin, Secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society, became his security.

The case came on to-day for trial; but the defendants not having been able, on so short a notice, to prepare their testimony, asked for a continuance, which, after a good deal of resistance on the part of the counsel for Mr. Wheeler, was granted. The case is postponed till the 27th instant.'

More of the Wheeler Case.

Col. J. H. Wheeler left Philadelphia on Saturday. He had scarcely left the city when J. M. McKim, William Still, and Mr. Earle, a lawyer, presented themselves at the office of Alderman Hibbard, and made the following affidavit:—

The information and complaint of Wm. Still, who being affirmed does say that John H. Wheeler did, on 18th day of July, 1855, violently and tumultously seize upon Jane Johnson, and attempt to carry her away contrary to her wish, claiming her as a fugitive from servitude or labor, and that he attempted to carry away said Jane in a violent, tumultuous and unreasonable manner, contrary to the act of Assembly of March 3, 1847, in such case made and provided; said John H. Wheeler is also at the same time charged with assault and battery on the person of Jane Johnson aforesaid, and with the attempt to kidnap the said Jane Johnson against the aforsaid act of Assembly.

Affirmed and subscribed before me this 11th day of August, 1855.

Commonwealth, vs. John H. Wheeler. } August 11, 1855. Warrant issued. WM. S. HIBBARD, Alderman.

Suicide of a Colored Preacher.

On Thursday morning, the Rev. Thomas Dutton, colored preacher, and a man of considerable property and irreproachable character, committed suicide at his residence at Sandy Hill, N. J., about 10 o'clock. His wife having prepared breakfast, went up to call him. Finding him asleep, she left him to go down again; but returning shortly after, she found the door barred. Fearing from recent strange conduct that he would harm himself, she alarmed a neighbor, who mounted up a ladder to an outside window, when he was seen sitting on a chair, with his throat cut, and a razor in his hand, with the blood streaming from the ghastly wound. Of course, they were too late to save him. He was seventy years of age, and of the Baptist denomination. He had been in an uneasy state of mind for some time, and though wealthy, labored under the impression that he could not pay his taxes, &c. He had also recently lost two of his children, which may have effected him. It is said he has before made several attempts to drown himself. He had also met with some recent pecuniary losses.—Patterson (N. J.) Guard. July 31

NOTICE.

The Shareholders and Managers of the PROVINCIAL FREEMAN are requested to meet at Chatham, on the 2nd Tuesday in October, without fail.

By order.

CALL!!!

Convention at Dawn.

TO THE COLORED PEOPLE OF CANADA.

BRETHREN:

In accordance with the wishes, and by the instruction of a meeting of our Fellow-Citizens, held in this Town, and on repeated expressions from similar meetings elsewhere, you are called to meet in Convention at DAWN, in this Province, on the last Wednesday of this month, August 29th, at 10 o'clock in the morning, for the purpose of investigating the affairs of our Property, known as the

"DAWN INSTITUTE,"

and of electing five new Trustees, and otherwise carrying out the original design of the donors to the same.

☞ Call Meetings! Send up your Delegates! Let there be a full attendance of the people, and of the former Students.—The Land is ours, and it is meet that we should control it, and make it useful to us in the way designed. Its affairs are now in a confused state. Let us meet, unravel the mystery, cut the Gordian knot, by which it is tied, rescue the place from dilapidation and ruin, economise its resources, and so make it what was intended to be—a benefit to the Colored people.

CHATHAM, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 22, 1855.

☞ DR JESSE BURKE is authorized to receive Subscriptions for this paper, and to give Receipts for the same.

☞ Mr. MOSES VINEY is authorized to act as Agent for this paper in the State of New York.

SALUTATORY.

It is due to ourselves, and to the patrons of the Provincial Freeman, to say, we take the Editorial chair, not because the proprietors of the paper could not do better, in their choice of an editor; but, because, they would not. The office is not our preference but it is made our duty, we believe, by the earnest request of the owners of the paper, its former Editor, its Agent, and the general interest of that cause it is intended to promote.

We acknowledge the honor bestowed upon us, by the Managers of the paper, in our election, and our indebtedness to them; and add, such position was unsought, and unexpected by us, and we only accept it, with the hope of aiding a good cause, until they should do better.

We take our place without pecuniary consideration. We are not rich, and have a family to provide for; and hence, we expect to continue to plant our own corn, and to "take it to mill." We have not thrown off our ordination vow; hence, we expect to preach the Gospel to a poor Church, for no pay, and to push along the Freeman. With a Bush-Editor, from the ebon. class, it is clear that the Literary Department of the paper must depend mainly on its numerous and able correspondents; and we hope they will continue to forward such material as will elevate, refine, and make our people known, as they should be. No doubt, they will continue, as they ought, to say something in their composition worth reading. As a people, we need something with a bone in it—both skull, and back, and that,—should be SHORT, LEGIBLE, and LUCID.

If God will help us, we wish to be radically righteous,—looking out for the rights of all, and maintaining our own. Friends, we would not forget; and to enemies, we would give our best attention. We would spare no effort, to aid our people, to exalt and dignify their character, by wisdom and wealth, and to incite them with a changeless determination to have their own HERE, AND EVERY WHERE. We would urge them to devotion to friends, and to implacability to incorrigible enemies, and if possible, induce them to be patriots, philanthropists and Christians.

Our cotemporary of "The Kent Advertiser, in his issue of June 29th, reviewed the remarks of our predecessor, in the Freeman of June 16th, and makes certain statements and preferred charges which, he is wholly unable to sustain. We are not disposed to disturb him, amid his glory, secured, for the colored defence, and especially since he is such a whole-souled Anti-Slavery man. We shall rejoice to learn that self-interest has not made him such, since, he doubtless will deny that he was whipped into the traces, by the publishing Agent of the Freeman—one of the best Editors our Province ever had, if such did wear the petticoats instead of the breeches—one that would be now blessing our country in the same capacity, but for the folly of adhering to a wrongly developed public sentiment, that would crush a woman whenever she attempts to do what has hitherto been assigned to men, even though God designed her to do it. But we do not intend to defend our predecessor, she does not need our aid in such a work, and we judge, our cotemporary of the Advertiser is aware of that fact, hence his balderdash AFTER her Valedictory. She, like Paul, will answer for herself, before the would-be "Felix," in our next: so, Mr. Advertiser, prepare to tremble.

The Advertiser's intimation that the colored people of Chatham, are a set of violators of the "law of God and man," we can but regard as a slander, unless his idea of law is that of slaveholders generally, that white-people may defend themselves, and their inalienable rights on "Sunday" or Monday, in keeping with "God's law," as well as man's; but the colored people cannot do the same without "a violation of the law of God and man." Ah! Mr. Advertiser, we understand your Anti-Slavery!

Your love for the colored man. You would make the world believe, that, we are a lawless set, would you? We will pin that point with a crow-bar, for we may need such a tool to lift you on the Anti-Slavery platform with. The colored people of this Province are as loyal and law-abiding as any class of people in the country—the Advertiser to the contrary, notwithstanding.

We hope to be wiser, for the information which "The Advertiser" gives, as to what the "Freeman" does and "ought" to do; to wit, follow its example, and "stick to facts, and not give a false coloring to language, &c.—poor example, Deacon, if your review of the "Freeman" of June 16th, is a fair specimen. But if we will but square the corner, then "The Advertiser" assures us, that the "Freeman" "will receive respect and attention from the intelligent portion of the community, which at present it does not receive." We hardly know what "The Advertiser" means, unless he intends to say, that "I am a fool;" for it is quite clear that the "Freeman" has received "attention" from him. But if he means, by intelligent portion of community," persons "endowed with the faculty of understanding or reason," we will compare "notes with him," or correspondence, names of contributors and subscription list of the "Freeman." Does he mean professional men and women? or those, who can merely read and write? or those, who "know beans when the bag is untied?" But no difference, what he means, we will show hands with him. We dare him to poke out his paws, in the way of an honest publication, of proof of "respect and attention received from the intelligent portion of the community." It seems clear, to "The Advertiser" that, as the "Freeman" is owned, edited and published by colored people, &c., that it receives respect and attention" from none else, and that they do not possess the FACULTY OF REASON—not "intelligent," and hence, not rational—therefore beasts of burden, and FIT ONLY FOR SLAVES.

☞ We regret deeply, that the issuing of the "Freeman," from Chatham, has so long been delayed; but it was unavoidable, so far as the Agent and ourselves were concerned. In the moving of the press and type, &c, they were injured, and hence the delay. But, having got under way, we hope to make good the past bad. We say so much to our friends, on that point, and deem it enough.

☞ It is believed that the subscription list of the PROVINCIAL FREEMAN is as large as any newspaper published in the County of Kent; hence, we ask, with hope, the public and our friends, for an equal share of the publishing business of the community. We advertise as cheap as any other journal, and do job work as neat and quick as it can be done in Chatham, and for as low prices. Give us a call.

☞ We send a number of the paper, this week, to many of our Baptist friends, both in the Province and United States. They will please return it, if they conclude not to become subscribers for it. But as Baptists, we have ever been favorable to efforts, which impress men with a sense of God's glory and things that effect their own good, and especially such as are connected with the voluntary and independent principle; hence, we can but hope, that those to whom we send the paper, will show their sympathy in such things now, and give the paper their support, as its design is to promote such objects.

☞ We are glad to learn that our friends had a very pleasant time of it on the "First of August, at Chatham. There were some 3000 present. Many of them were from adjoining Counties, and the United States. Our friends from Detroit, chartered a steamer and came up en masse. It is enough to say that they had on that occasion, good music, good eatables, and good speeches. It seems all was good, but "Lord John;—THE THIRTY PER CENT SHAVER, on the bonds of Old "DAWN"—the "GRACEFUL VILLIFIER" of the humble Baptists!

☞ L. B. Shears, Esq., will accept our thanks for Toronto papers kindly sent us.

☞ The meeting of the Canadian Anti-Slavery Association will be held with the First Baptist Church of Dawn, C. W., on Friday, before the Second Lord's Day, in September next, at half past 10 o'clock, a.m. We hope the Churches of the Association will be well represented in the meeting, as there will be business of much importance to be transacted, &c.

W. P. NEWMAN,
Cor. Sec'y.

☞ It is a matter of much joy to many Christian hearts, that our brethren of the First Baptist Church of Toronto, C. W., have liberated themselves from a bondage worse than American Slavery, in leaving their former place of worship. The property was theirs, and worth from $3000 to $5000; but the Deed for it was "a high Church" one, and repugnant almost to every principle of Baptist usage, and powerfully oppressed the conscience of the Church. The TRUSTEES, who were appointed for life, could relieve them, but would not, and there is no other power in the government that can. The Pope of Rome is a lover of religious liberty to those men. "LEGREE," in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was a Christian in comparison with such sable officials. The brethren have obtained another place of worship, and we hope the friends in Toronto will help them to pay for it, for they are worthy of sympathy and aid.

New Advertisements.

We would call attention to the list of new Chatham advertisements published this week, and also to the Boarding House kept by Benjamin Tolbert, at Detroit. Visitors to Detroit will be agreeably surprised at the thorough renovation and other necessary changes made by the obliging host. Give him a call!

☞ Our London Correspondent will be read with profit, and we hope he will be read carefully.

Mr. Fairfield, we know, and also very many of the members of "The True Band Society," and can but hope, that they mean well; but if their "leader" is a fair exponent of their principles and aims, we must beg to differ with them.

We live at DAWN, and know that Mr. Fairfield uttered a falsehood about the imprisonment of our fellow-citizens, if he is correctly reported by our London correspondent.

The Rev. Richard Preston, from Hallifax, Nova Scotia, delivered a highly interesting Lecture, to an attentive audience, in the 2nd Baptist Church in this town, on Monday evening last. Many facts were stated respecting the position, influence, and numbers of our people in his far-off home, as well as of his fellow-subjects generally; and his remarks embraced a larger field of thought and research than we are often entertained with by our Lecturers. Mr. Preston is evidently well read, loyal, and and earnest, in enforcing his views of the duty we owe to ourselves and our adopted country. He should have a careful hearing.

☞ It will be seen by our readers, that Wm. Still, one of the most talented and efficient Anti-Slavery men among our brethren in the States, is also involved in the difficulties of the Philadelphia Slave case. Friend Still, and his worthy colleagues in that heroic act, have the deep sympathies of every true man and woman in their present position, and a happy issue out of all their afflictions.

☞ The sensible farmers of Essex deferred their First of August gathering until the 14th, because of their harvest, when they were joined by a respectable party from Detroit.

☞ Do not forget the Convention at Dawn, on the 29th. Every man should be on the spot the DAY BEFORE. In fact it is absolutely important that they should be there "soon in the morning." Let there be a grand rally of the true grits among us, to "look at their land"—that excellent 300 acre plot, which is, in all probability, destined for building lots.

☞ Remember the Camp-Meeting at Malden. A large gathering is anticipated.

☞ For the benefit of our readers at a distance, we publish in to-day's issue, an interesting account of the beautiful and prosperous Town of Chatham.

Correspondence.

Fairfield and the True Band Society in the City of London.

No. II.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

MR. EDITOR,—DEAR SIR:—There was a large Meeting held of this Order, on Monday evening, the 2nd inst., in the A. M. E. Chapel, for the purpose of allowing Mr. Fairfield an opportunity of expressing his views relative to the True Band Society. After the Meeting was organized, and the Chairman had taken his seat, Mr. Fairfield came forward and called for the Constitution and By-Laws of the Society, and ordered them to be read. The house being very much crowded with strangers, as well as members, we expected to see a large number of new members added to the Band; but, I am sorry to say, the Constitution and By-Laws were lost, and could not be found. Here some half hour was spent in sending a person for the Secretary, but he returned without Secretary or papers. This sad story appeared to fall heavy on the mind of the speaker, and he being at a loss what to do, he resolved to give the Society some advice, which I think lasted about two hours. This was my second opportunity of hearing Mr. Fairfield; therefore, I made up my mind to hear him through, and here I was not a little disappointed, for I expected to hear a man full of wit and eloquence, as I had heard he was both the organ and leader of the True Band Society; but I found he was destitute of both. I shall not undertake to give you a full description of his remarks, and neither could I, for they were lengthy and very scattering. In his remarks, he said the colored people ought not to sue one another at law; they should appoint their own officers and settle their own difficulties. He said, "they spent in Chatham, in 1854, $2800 in law, one with another;" and also "at Dawn, in 1854," he said, "there were twenty colored men put in jail for sums as low as from 75 cts, and upwards, to $3;" this, also, I think he said, was done by their colored friends. He advised them to do away with all differences of opinion, and come together, and build a large place of worship for all the colored people in London. Here, some slight contradiction had taken place in reference to imprisonment for small debts, but Mr. Fairfield affirmed nevertheless, it was the case. Opponent said, he was not aware of any such law in Canada, but here, Mr. Fairfield finds 20 cases of imprisonment in a place where there is no jail. He tells the colored people they must organize themselves in societies, live in union, and become respectable like the whites; and yet he tells them they must all huddle together in one common place of worship, aside from the whites, irrespective of their religious views. Here, I think he made a great blunder; he does not see the whites doing this; he purposes to be their leader, framing their constitutions and forming societies, and those constitutions claiming no responsibility over officers or members, but leaving them all as loose fish. He tells them to take the example of the whites. I should like to know whose example this is, is it white or black? if white we want no more of it, and if it is his own production, we hope he will go home and learn to be lead, before he undertakes to lead us. I have nothing against the True Band Society, if properly conducted; but if you will allow me to use the words of a gentleman, who a few evenings ago was invited to address the True Band Society in this city, I think it must be remodelled, before any good can be done. It is true the most of the colored people in Canada are from Slavery, and have but little or no education, but what can they gain from being lead by a man as ignorant as themselves; if we are to be lead by ignorant men, we might as well have black men as white men.

The Louisville Riots.

Dreadful Loss of Life.

Monday last, 30th July, will be remembered by the citizens of Louisville for many years to come. Such hellish and diabolical acts as those committed in our midst, in a civilized and enlightened community are without parallel.

The following incidents and loss of life and property, without comment or note, is as near as we could get at the outrages committed. It will satisfy those living at a distance, that the greatest, the most vile outrages ever known in any country has been perpetrated in the free city of Lousville, Kentucky.

Before the polls were open half an hour, the Know-Nothings took possession of them, preventing all democrats and foreigners from voting.

The first fight took place between an American and an Irishman, in the vicinity of the Kentucky engine-house, which resulted in the death of the Irishman, who died in jail. The American we believe was badly hurt.

A man named Townsend was shot and stabbed, on Jefferson street, while going from his store to his residence. He will probably die.

A German shoemaker was killed while harmlessly walking home, in the Second Ward.

A crowd of Know-Nothings attacked two Germans, who were standing in front of their shop, and would have maltreated them had they not made good their escape.

We heard of five Germans who were lying in a Drug Store, in a dying condition, on Jefferson above Preston street.

A gang of bullies infested the upper part of town, and tore down several tenements near the bridge, on Jefferson street, and cruelly beat several Germans, robbed them of all the valuables in their possession, and broke every article of furniture in their houses.

Late in the evening, a brewery was set on fire, on Jefferson street, and burned to the ground.

The Shelby street Catholic Church was broken open, searched, and many things broken.

The mob then proceeded to the Court House, and got possession of a cannon and several guns, with which they marched through the Second and First Wards. Later in the evening, we saw them marching down Jefferson, we suppose to the Seventh and Eighth, carrying a banner with the motto "America and Americans."

At the First Ward, we heard of three Germans who, with bloody heads, made their escape to their dwellings on Main street, but were followed by the crowd, fired on in the midst of women and children, and afterwards dragged out, unmercifully beaten until they fell senseless.

Jesse Hughes, a good Democrat, was beaten, cut, and shot so badly, at the corner of Jefferson and Jackson streets, that he died shortly.

At the first Ward there were a continual row, in which several men (we could not learn how many, or what side) got killed and mortally wounded. During the whole night that part of the town was illuminated from the conflagration of the houses of poor and peaceable Germans, lit by the base incendiaries match. We heard of two Cooper shops, in which nobody was, that were set on fire, they were opposite R. Atkinson's Pork House on Main street.

While the Brewery on Jefferson was in flames, a German leaped from a house, tried to escape the blows aimed at his head, and had nearly succeeded, when a man whom he was passing in his flight knocked him down with a monster club, the crowd gathered around him and beat him till he lay insensible.

At the Sixth Ward, at the Court House, the Know-Nothings were determined none but one of their order should vote; not a democrat, but particularly a foreigner dare go up the steps. Several Irishmen were attacked on the corner of Fifth, by the Know-Nothing bullies, as they passed from one poll to another. We saw an unlucky Irishman who got in, but found the place too hot for him, jumped out of the second story on the ground, for which he was taken to jail.

A man, we believe, named Kelly, was shot in the Court-house Square, through the heart, and then taken to jail to die, we suppose.

Two others were lying in the yard all night, who had been shot and brutally beaten during the fight in the evening.

The Eighth Ward was the crowning scene of all, here death and destruction went hand in hand. The Irish were driven from the polls, they retaliated, in which we heard that an American was shot. To revenge their brother, they attacked a whole row of Mr. Quinn's frame buildings. Shot in among women and children, then broke in and took out two men, and tried to kill them; succeeded with one and hung the other. Amid tantalising gibes and ribald jests, unbecoming even to Canibals or Vampyres, a woman who attempted to save her husband was pitched down stairs, breaking her neck and limbs, so that she died. Several other men were killed the exact number we cannot learn.

The mob finding their game becoming scarce, set the torch to the houses; the women fled, one we heard of who was flying with a young infant in her arms, was followed by a hard hearted wretch, who, coming up, put the muzzle of the weapon to the child's head, fired and dashed its brains over its mother's arms.

Up to a late hour the horizon was illuminated with the flames of burned dwellings, in which many a poor honest working man, with his wife and dear little ones perished, in preference to coming out to meet death from pistols and bowie knives, in the hands of freemen.

At Oakland, a mob from the 7th and 8th Wards, led on by — Wix and George Jones, made a sortie on the polls, badly beat several Germans, who retreated as quick as possible. One of the Germans died at seven o'clock yesterday morning.

An accidental discharge of a pistol, shot a boy in the leg, and a man in the hip, at the 8th Ward, about noon on Monday.

The mob continued all night on the watch for the d——d Irish and Dutch. To-day, an Irishman got beaten on Market street, so bad that he is not expected to live, he was arrested and put in jail. The mob became excited at the Court-house, and would have again went on with their diabolical practices, had it not been for the exhortations of Judge Bullock and Mayor Barbee; Capt. Rousseau got a decree from the Mayor to organize a company of citizen police, from the protection of property and life.

The mob, we are informed, while the police were organizing at the Court house, badly beat a man on Front street.

Coast of Africa.

Serious Affray with the Natives,

The steamship 'Retriever' arrived at Plymouth on Tuesday night, with the African mails and 3400 oz. of gold. She left Fernando Po, June 3rd, Bonny 6th, Lagos 9th, Accra 12th, Cape Coast 13th, Sierra Leone 23rd, and Bathurst 27th.

A smart affair occurred during the month of May, on the Malakoolo river, north of Sierra Leone, between our troops and the natives. Differences having arisen between some traders and the inhabitants, the 'Teazer,' 3 gun steamer, with a number of troops, was despatched to the spot. A vigorous fire was opened on the town with great effect. The troops, however, did not disembark until the following day, when the natives, having received strong reinforcements, poured such a galling fire on our men that they were compelled to retire to their boats, with the loss of upwards of 100 killed and wounded. Lieutenant Nicholas, commander of the 'Teazer,' was shot through both legs. Among the killed are Lieut. Wylie, Mr. Frith, of the Commissariat department, and Assistant Paymaster Andrew, of the 'Teazer,' who volunteered.

In the conflict on the African coast, in which the steam gun vessel, and 150 officers and men of the West India Regiment were engaged, 72 were killed, 12 wounded or missing, and nine taken prisoners. One boat was capsized, containing 30 or 40 men, who were drowned or shot.

The following are the authentic particulars of the affair:

On the 21st of May, at 3 o'clock p. m., Capt. Fletcher, 1st West India Regiment, commanding the troops at Sierra Leone, received an order from Acting Gov. Dougan to embark 150 men of all ranks on board the screw steam gun vessel 'Teazer,' 3. At 3 o'clock all were on board, consisting of the 1st and 3rd West India Regiments, commanded by Captain Fletcher, Lieutenant Strachan and Wylie, of the 1st, Lieutenant Vincent of the 2nd, and Lieutenants Kerr and Beazley of the 3rd West India Regiment; Deputy Assistant Commissary General Firth, Commissariat Staff; Staff Surgeon Marchant and Assistant Surgeon Bradshaw. The 'Teazer' anchored at 9 a. m. on the 22nd off the town of Malageak, and, after firing a 32 pound shot and a 16 pound shell over the town, a flag of truce was hoisted at the King's house, upon which Capt. Fletcher landed the troops under cover of the steamer's guns, consulted with the joint commissioners, Lieutenant Commander Nicholas and Mr. Dillet, private secretary to Acting Governor Dougan, and granted 1 hour to the King to hold his "palaver." At the expiration of one hour and a half the troops advanced to the centre of the town without opposition, and set fire to the mosque, the King's house, and several other buildings. The intense heat of the flame compelled the troops to retire to their boats, on reaching which a smart fire was opened upon them by the enemy in ambush at each side of the landing place, and five soldiers were wounded. The Teazer was reached without further opposition, when it was discovered a portion of the town remained unburned; another consultation was held, and it was determined to drop down to Binty Point, at the mouth of the Mallieuri, and reduce Malageak to ashes, according to the instructions of Acting Governor Dougan.

On the morning of the 23rd, at an early hour, Commander Nicholas poured into the town (which was still in flames) and the adjacent bushes, grape, canister, and shell. In half an hour the troops again landed without opposition, and advanced. Com. Nicholas and Mr. Dillet headed the landing division to point out the houses to be burned, Captain Fletcher and Lieutenant Wylie followed with the main division to support. In a moment the small advanced division appeared to be attacked by an overwhelming force. Mr. Dillet fell to the rear, wounded in the head and left leg; Commander Nicholas shot through both thighs; and Serjeant Major Scanlon, of the 3rd, and several men were killed. Captain Fletcher was driven back to a small bank of mud and sand near the entrance of the Malagea; Lieutenant Wylie was wounded and subsequently killed; Lieut. Vincent shot through the body; Paymaster Edwards, of the 'Teazer,' shot in the head and heart; Deputy Assistant Commissary General Firth taken prisoner; and the men fell rapidly, killed by the enemy's fire. One boat succeeded in reaching the 'Teazer;' but the Pinnace, with 30 to 40 men, in pushing off, filled and capsized, riddled with bullets. The soldiers were either drowned, shot by the enemy, or butchered when they gained the banks of the river. Of the 150 men of all ranks embarked, 72 were killed, 12 wounded or missing, and 9 taken prisoners, (since released.)

On the 24th of May the 'Teazer' returned to Sierra Leone with the survivors of the troops.

At Niagara Falls yesterday, five men got into a boat at the Suspension Bridge, when they broke one of the oars and the boat became unmanageable. They were carried down to the Whirlpool, when the boat upset and broke to pieces. All the men were drowned. Names not known.—Elkhart Herald, Aug. 11.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morning.—I'm a stranger in your town, and would kindly inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King Street, Chatham rear of Smith's Grocery, and he will accommodate you to a T, both in your judgment in regard to the fit of boots and shoes."

"Most excellent. I'm an old boot and shoe maker myself, and always that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, in the rear of Smith's Grocery, King Street East; any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He is also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage.

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plagay pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe, closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am, for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

CAUTION.

FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangementas colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1841, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, [illegible] the history of [illegible] nation, [illegible] to the present time, [illegible] the history of [illegible] Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another. General [illegible], at suitable periods, presenting [illegible] of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present [illegible].

It is proper to state, that while the author [illegible] only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best [illegible] final [illegible] is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modern civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, [illegible] Portraits of cities, monuments, coins, medals portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing hundreds of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It is a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God and [illegible] the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable [illegible] to [illegible] and in the [illegible] object to become practically [illegible] the Doctrines he [illegible] and to cause their influences to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works [illegible] has a most rare natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,

OR

The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,

A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Fashions, Social Morals, Book Notices, Receipts &c.

Our aim being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office

4 Copies,	- per annum	$ 5

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the public, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable; and those whom the most direful and [illegible] have [illegible] the [illegible] possessed with the [illegible] of [illegible] and generation are stamped with these same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as Arrivas, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the [illegible] and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first descerated by [illegible]—Hispaniola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the pat

Poetry.

THE RIGHT MUST WIN.

The following beautiful lines we found in a Roman Catholic work, containing all the hymns of the Roman Breviary and Missal:

Oh! it is hard to work for God,
To rise and take his part
Upon this battle-field of earth,
And not sometimes lose heart!

He hides himself so wondrously,
As though there were no God;
He is least seen when all the powers
Of ill are most abroad.

Or He deserts us at the hour
The fight is almost lost;
And seems to leave us to ourselves
Just when we need him most.

Ill masters good; good seems to change
To ill with greatest ease;
And worst of all, the good with good
Is at cross purposes.

It is not so, but so it looks:
And we lost courage then;
And doubts will come if God hath kept
His promises to men.

Ah! God is other than we think;
His ways are far above,
Far above reason's height, and reached
Only by child-like love.

The look, the fashion of God's ways
Love's life-long study are;
She can be bold, and guess, and act,
When reason would not dare.

She has a prudence of her own;
Her step is firm and free;
Yet there is cautious science, too,
In her simplicity.

Workman of God! O lose not heart,
But learn what God is like;
And in the darkest battle field
Thou shalt know where to strike.

Oh! blessed is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field when He Is most invisible!

And blessed is he who can divine
Where real right doth lie,
And dares to take the side that seems
Wrong to man's blindfold eye!

Oh, learn to scorn the praise of men!
Oh! learn to love with God!
For Jesus won the world through shame,
And beckons thee his road.

God's glory is a wondrous thing,
Most strange in all its ways,
And of all things on earth, least like
What men agree to praise.

Muse on his justice, downcast soul!
Muse, and take better heart;
Back with thine angel to the field;
Good luck shall crown thy part!

God's justice is a bed whence we
Our anxious hearts may lay,
And, weary with ourselves, may sleep
Our discontent away.

For right is right, since God is God;
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin!

Miscellaneous.

DIALOGUE
BETWEEN A NEWLY MARRIED COUPLE:
OR,
MATRIMONIAL QUARRELS.

"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!"

"A pebble in the streamlet scant
Has turn'd the course of many a river;
A dew drop on the baby plant
Has warp'd the giant oak forever."

A young couple had passed the first few weeks of their marriage at the house of a friend. Having at length occupied their new home, they were taking their first breakfast, when the following scene took place.

The young husband was innocently opening a boiled egg in an egg-cup. The bride observed that he was breaking the shell at what she thought the wrong end. "How strange it looks," said she, "to see you break your egg at the small end, my dear! No one else does so; and it looks so odd."

"O, I think it is quite as good, in fact better than breaking it at the large end, my love; the egg runs over the top," replied the husband.

"But it looks very odd, when no one else does so," rejoined the wife.

"Well, now, I really do think it is not a nice way you have got of eating an egg. That dipping of strips of bread and butter into an egg, certainly is not tidy. But I do not object to your doing as you please, if you will let me break my egg at the small end," retorted the husband.

"I am sure my way is not so bad as eating fruit-pie with a knife, as you do, instead of using a fork; and you always eat the syrup, as if you were not accustomed to have such things. You really do not see how very bad it looks, or I am sure you would not do so," added the wife.

"The syrup is made to be eaten with the pie; and why should I send it away in the plate?" asked the husband.

"No well-bred persons clear up their plates, as if they were starved," said the bride, with a contemptuous cast of her head.

"Well, then, I am not a well-bred person," replied the husband, angrily.

"But you must be, if we are to live comfortably together," was the sharp answer of the fastidious lady.

"Well, I must break my egg at the small end, so it does not signify; and I must also eat the syrup."

"Then I will not have either fruit-pie or eggs at the table."

"But I will have them," petulantly exclaimed the husband."

"Then I wish I had not been married to you," cried the young wife, bursting into tears.

"And so do I," added the now incensed husband, as he rose, and walked out of the room.

This domestic quarrel was followed by others, equally trifling in their origin, and disgraceful in their character, until the silly couple made themselves so disagreeable to each other that their home became unendurable, and they separated.

"If ye bite and devour one another, take heed ye be not consumed one of another." Gal. v. 15.

Guard well thy lips, none, none can know
What evils from the tongue may flow,
What guilt, what grief may be incurred
By one incautious hasty word.

From the London Morning Chronicle.

Shocking Termination to a Marriage in France.

A frightful case of hydrophobia is described in the Lyons journals, which, if correctly stated, would go to prove that this fatal malady can remain in the system as long as four years without development. A young farmer named Peyron, about twenty-five years of age, in the department of the Rhine, was married a few weeks ago to a neighbor's daughter. The young couple had been long attached to each other; but the parents of the bride had refused their consent on account of the strangeness of conduct occasionally observed in the young man, who was otherwise a most desirable match, his parents tolerably well off, and the son himself generally of exemplary conduct. His passion for the girl at length became so violent that he could not exist without her, and his mother, fearing from his manner that he meditated suicide, went to the parents of the young woman, and, after some entreaty, prevailed upon them to agree to the match. Young Peyron at once recovered his spirits, the young woman was delighted, and the marriage was celebrated with all the rustic pomp and ceremony common in that part of the provinces, all concluding with a grand dinner and the inevitable ball. The gayieties were kept up until daylight, when the company separated. The newly married couple were lodged in one wing of the farm-house, separate from the main building; but, in a short time after they had retired, cries were heard from the nuptial chamber. At first they were unnoticed; but at last they increased to shrieks, and the father and mother, alarmed, hastened to the room, followed by the farm servants. The cries were, by the time they arrived, changed to scarcely audible groans from the poor girl; and, on breaking open the door, she was found in the agonies of death—her bosom torn open and lacerated in the most horrible manner, and the wretched husband, in a fit of raving madness and covered with blood, having actually devoured a portion of the unfortunate girl's breast. A cry of horror burst forth from all present, and he was dragged from the room after a most violent resistance, it taking no less than six men to hold him down. Aid was instantly sent for, but before the doctor could reach the spot, the unhappy victim was no more.

Young Peyron was put under treatment, and a strait waistcoat was attempted to be put upon him; but his struggles and screams were such that the doctor, apprehensive that he would expire in the assistants' hands, ordered them to desist. The unfortunate man had by this time become so weak that he was easily conveyed to bed, and died at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, without having for one moment recovered his consciousness. It was then recollected, in answer to searching questions by a physician, that somewhere about five years previously he had been bitten by a strange dog, and taken the usual precaution against hydrophodia. But, although the dog was killed, it had never been satisfactorily shown that it was really mad; and no ill consequences resulting from the bite, his friends concluded it would come to nothing, and the accident had been altogether forgotten. It was considered by the doctor that the circumstances preceding the marriage and the excitement of the occasion itself had roused the latent virus, which had so long lain dorment in the blood, and lead to the outbreak of frenzy which had ended so tragically. On the medical report being laid before the authorities, the extraordinary nature of the case naturally excited much attention and considerable controversy—the opinions of the heads of the profession being, after full enquiry, that there was no hydrophobia whatever in the case, but rooted insanity, and that it was shown to exist by the occasional aberrations of the unfortunate young man as before mentioned; and that his diseased temperament and too violent passions, powerfully acted on by the circumstances, led to the fatal consequences narrated above. This sad catastrophe has given rise to a fierce medical controversy, in some of the professional journals, on the nature of hydrophobia, from which it would appear that, although instances of remarkable cures of this frightful malady are often described in the journals, no authenticated account of its favourable termination is yet known in France.

Fresh Air.

How valuable, and yet how little appreciated, how little sought.

Without food or exercise, man may enjoy life some hours; he may live some days. He cannot exist a few minutes without air. And yet, what laws are so infringed as the laws of respiration? In our temples of public worship, in our courts of justice, in our prisons, our mines, our factories, and our schools, ventilation was, until [illegible] disregarded, [illegible] by the most [illegible] ignorance, that even for the wealthier classes of society not one house in a hundred—perhaps not one in a thousand—is constructed on sound sanitary principles with respect to its ventilation.

MY CHILD.

A Slave Mother's Lament.

Where is she now, my little bright eyed daughter—
She who in gladness [illegible] the Potomac's water?
Joy of my life, of my lone heart's breathing,
No more her soft arms twine round me, caressing!

Scarce had three summer suns her young life gladdened,
And [illegible] more [illegible] sudden fell;
Like a bright flower in desert wilds blooming,
Comfort and joy by its sweet fragrance giving!

Rosa, my darling! life's sole, only treasure,
My love for thee no human words can measure;
My very life blood in thy pulse seemed bounding,
And like sweet music was thy glad voice's sounding!

Thy father, far away, is in the rice fields pining,
And Hope's bright sun for him no more is shining;
They sold him from my side, and left me broken hearted!
How can I, darling, from thee, too, be parted!

Dark, dark and lonely now the hours are seeming,
And my sad heart to grief's lone haunt is beating
A dirge-like strain, from crushed affections gushing;
The life of joy and hope forever hushing.

Far, far away, beyond the rushing Santee,
To the Slave-mart, my child, they now have borne thee;
No mother's heart of love may shield thee ever—
And her fond words again shall cheer thee never.

And thou, so pure and fair—ah! what will be thy future?
And who will seek to [illegible] thy young heart to nurture Virtue's fair flowers, and save thee from the tempter,
When thou a maiden, shalt life's threshhold enter?

Oh! were thou in the grave, but calmly sleeping—
The wild vine and the daisy o'er thee creeping,
No sin or shame resting on thy spirit's brightness,
No sorrow's [illegible] thy sunny lightness

Oh, mother! that in anguish wild art weeping,
And o'er thy baby's grave sad vigil keeping—
Think of the Slave's sad lot—of her deep sorrow;
For her there is no joy, no bright to-morrow.

Pity her woes! and oh! let her not languish,
Uncared for and forgot, in her deep anguish;
Give her thy prayer—the prayer of high endeavor—
Rest not till Truth each gall'ng chain can sever

Human Rights and Slavery.

The case of human rights against slavery has been adjudicated in the court of conscience times innumerable. The same verdict has always been rendered—"Guilty;" the same sentence has always been pronounced, "Let it be accursed;" and human nature, with her million echoes, has rung it round the world, in every language under heaven, "Let it be accursed—let it be accursed!" He is false to human nature who will not say "Amen." There is not a man on earth who does not believe that slavery is a curse.

"Oh sisters, with brothers dear,
Oh men, with mothers and wives,
It is not cotton you're wearing out,
But human beings' lives!"

Slavery outside of the Slave States.

No more slave territory! Is this all you ask for? Is this justice, mercy or benevolence? What! rest contented while some three millions of our brethren are in chains, bowing down under the despot's yoke? Does God approve of such a compromise? Give Satan an inch?—never. Never rest, never cease to agitate, while a single human being is under the oppressor's hand! Never. No, never! Break every yoke. Let the oppressed go free—throughout the world. Banish it everywhere. Fight against it as against robbery, murder, arson—assault and battery, or any other horrible crime!

A Short and True Story of a Fugitive.

A poor Slave lived in the far South. He felt it was hard to be at the will of a master, to be bought, and sold, and whipped, and driven, as if a beast of the field. He, by some means had heard, that far to the North, there is a land of freedom called Canada. He determined to be free or die in the effort, gain what seemed to him dearer than life. In the dark night, he started upon his long and dangerous journey. In the day-time he hid himself in dark recesses, and unfrequented places; and again he travelled at night, wandering as he could when clouds covered the starry heavens; and when the sky was clear, the North Star was his guide. He had nothing to eat but the little he could gather at night by the way. Often he was hungry and faint. Often he sighed and wept alone, driven out from the sympathies of all his fellow beings. His heart leaped at the sound of the rustling leaf as if the footsteps of the pursuers were heard. Many wearisome days and nights passed away—at length he crossed the Ohio River, into Clermont County, State of Ohio. His clothes were worn out and his shoes were without bottoms, and he had no food to eat. Pressing want forced him to venture again upon the dwellings of men. He offered himself to a Farmer as day laborer. The Farmer and his family had prejudices against the poor man, because he was black. This was very wrong, the poor man could not help being black. The Framer hired him because he was in need of a laborer. In a few days the farmer and his family forget all about the color of the poor runaway Slave, and became very much attached to him, he ventured to tell them that he was on his way to Canada, and how far he had come, and that he needed shoes and clothes and money, to enable him to reach the land of safety. The Farmer took his horse and rode to town, a few miles distant, in which an Anti-slavery society had but lately been formed, and said to the Abolitionists.

"There is a runaway slave at my house, he has come a great distance, he needs clothes, and shoes and money to bear his expenses to Canada." These good, but then persecuted people, bought him shoes and clothes, and provided money for his expenses, and gave all to the poor fugitive slave. His heart melted in him. He wept like a child! He vented his gratitude in tears, for he was so overjoyed that he could not speak! Here in a strange land, he found white people not enemies but brothers and sisters, ready to aid him in his trials and wants. It had never before entered his mind that there were such white people on earth! How happy these good people must have been in relieving and making happy a poor colored brother. How "blessed is he that considereth the poor!" Our Heavenly Father will bless those that will relieve the oppressed, and show mercy to the afflicted: but he will be offended at those who despise and oppress the poor black man, and he will punish them unless they repent and seek forgiveness through the merits of the Saviour.

The Death of a Heathen, with Hope, in Africa.

There is always a horror so deep and heartrending, in the thought of a heathen exchanging worlds, that I seldom suffer my thoughts to dwell on their dying scenes, but when we add to the ordinary death scene of the dark sons of superstition, the thoughts of the mind slightly awakened to the awful truths of depravity, its condemnation and loss without Christ, O how trying to one who would give life for their soul's salvation. With these remarks allow me to introduce a heathen woman just stepping into eternity. She was young, and but a few days before healthy and in her prime. Many Sabbaths has she stood by the open palaver house to listen to a few words of the gospel, but life looked long and she heeded not the gracious words of Jesus. She clang to her idols. But now she is on her last hour of time. The thought that she was dying, crossed her mind. The thought of her sins, Christ crucified, a just Judge, come rushing into her mind. She is overcome. She faints, those by her side think she is dead. The deep and heart affecting wailing for the dead disturbs for a moment the quiet of the night. She recovers her senses and speaks, all is still again. She raises herself up and sits and speaks again. And what words! They sound so like a voice from the grave. "I am a sinner! Oh, how I have sinned! My heart, my heart is all vile, all corruption and sin. What can I do? How can I be clean?" She stops and looks on her friends a moment, then continues by asking if there was any in town who could pray for her. "God has shown me my sins that I may repent and pray before I die. Call one to pray for me." One was called who had been taught to pray, and read the prayer book, and though she had long neglected her own soul, she sat by the convicted sinner's death-bed to listen to the bitter repentings of a soul's last moments in time; and the request for prayers, such as a dying sinner only can make. She could offer no excuse, but turned to some appropriate prayer, and kneeling with the dying woman, she read those earnest petitions. The prayer was soon ended, and the poor woman fell gently from her kneeling position on her mat, dead. The soul had gone into the presence of her Maker,—to meet a smile or frown, who can tell? Poor immortal! the seed sown in thy heart was not totally lost. It quickened, so that thou didst give God glory—didst declare Him just, and thyself guilty, helpless, and undone! O that thou hadst been wise betimes!

Agricultural, &c.

The Globe says, that one of the best indications of the present agricultural prosperity of this portion of the Province may be found in the large increase of machinery purchased this season and put into operation by the farmers. Of mowing and reaping machines alone, 140 have been landed on the wharves at this port since navigation opened, and persons qualified to judge, estimate that upwards of fifteen hundred of these labor-saving instruments have been put up in Upper Canada this spring and summer. In addition to this, we understand that manufacturers in Canada, and on the frontier cities of the States are crowded with orders which they cannot supply this season. This is at least an increase of 150 per cent over previous years. The average price of these machines is $120, and admitting the above estimate to be correct, it will be seen that over $180,000 has been expended for mowers and reapers alone!

Mowing Machines v. Scythes.

Now let us compare a little, the two modes of cutting grass. Day laborers, hired at $1 per day, will probably mow in medium grass, 1½ acres to the hand; that is, it will cost $5 or $6 to mow 8 acres, and 25 cents each hand for boarding will be $1,50 more, which, added to $5,50, makes $7 for mowing 8 acres. Now hire a man with a span of horses and a machine to cut the 8 acres, at 50 cents per acre, and he will cut it in a day, $4—and $1 more will pay their boarding, making in all $5, and the grass will be spread better for curing than a man will spread it after the five hands, which, in the estimate, will make $3 advantage to the mower. At that rate, the machine will pay for itself in 40 days' mowing, besides saving so much hard labor.

The Working of Cows.

Why should not cows work for their living, as well as other females, animal and human? We were visiting a friend the other day, who owns a small farm, and manages it well; and, in the course of our observations about his premises, he called our attention to a large calf, the largest one we ever saw at the early age of two days old. It was a beauty. We wanted also to see the cow that produced such fruit. He showed her to us. She was a good-conditioned cow, but only of the ordinary size. He then remarked that the cow belonged to a yoke of cows, which, with two other cows, yoked, had done all his farm-work for several years past—hauling wood, drawing stone, ploughing green sward, harrowing the ground, hauling manure, &c., &c. They worked as kindly, and more actively, than oxen, and appeared in as good plight, and produced as good calves, and gave as much milk as any lazy cows, that did not work. He is quite sure that a small farmer, who has no very heavy work to do—such as logging, &c., had much better keep four cows, and teach them to work, than to keep two cows only, and one yoke of oxen. The expense is less; he will get more milk, and will be able to perform as much work. Of course, if he works his cows, he will give them extra keeping; and this will enable them to give as much milk whilst they work as less well-fed and more idle cows will give. The females of our own species work, and some of them work as hard as men; the females, too, of the horse genus, equal their mates of the other sex in the service of man; why, pray, should not cows also be made to perform such operations as may be consistent with their health and usefulness in other respects?—Drew's Rural Intelligencer.

Ruta Bagas.

The Ruta Baga, or Swedish turnip, is becoming of great importance as an auxiliary food for animals, particularly milch cows. The composition of the Ruta Baga is 80 per cent water, 5 per cent starch, 3 gum, 9 sugar, 2 albumen, and the rest salts. The proportion of sugar is quite large, and the albumen or nitrous matter is also fair.

The ground for Ruta Baga should be plowed in the early part of July, particularly if a crop of clover, oats, lucern, &c., be grown upon it and plowed under. This gives time for the partial decomposition of the green crops, which acts as manure for the turnips. Ruta Bagas may be planted from the 25th of July to the first of August in this climate. The ground should be prepared in a manner similar to that described in our article on carrots, a few weeks since. The ground must be thoroughly harrowed, and the drills made for carrots; compost, barnyard manure, or guano may be applied in the drills and then thoroughly mixed with the soil by means of a cultivator. The seed can be planted with a drill, or dropped from the hand.

Large crops of Ruta Bagas may be raised with but little weeding, since the leaves are large and grow more rapidly than carrots, they require less labor to prevent the growth of weeds.

Domestic animals of almost every kind require more succulent food than dry hay. Milch cows could be profitably fed on Ruta Bagas, Carrots, &c., without imparting any unpleasant flavor to the milk or butter, if they be fed just after the cows are milking. Even the tops of carrots and ruta bagas, can be thus profitably used without any inconvenience.

The importance of roots as an auxiliary food in the winter is attracting attention. We referred to the fact that circus horses are fed on carrots with advantage. Ruta Bagas are probably better for cows than for horses. Even fowls require something less nutrititious than grain. In the summer they can eat grass, in the winter they should have boiled turnips, beets, carrots or raw cabbage leaves.

The feeding of stock should be thoroughly studied, but it involves a knowledge of vegetable and animal Physiology and Chemistry, &c., and these sciences are not to be acquired in a day.

Agriculture is a far deeper subject than law or medicine, because it involves so many collateral sciences. Let farmers reflect, experiment and read, and they will elevate a calling by nature the most important and philosophical of all others.—Norristown Olive Branch.

RECIPES, &c.

Lemon Juice a Cure for Rheumatism.

The editor of the Ostego Republican says: "We can add our testimony in favor of lemon juice. The physician who attended us during the time we were confined to bed with the rheumatism, made free use of the juice of lemon; giving us the amount contained in one lemon every four hours, and it operated like a charm. In five days we were almost entirely relieved of the most acute pain that one could live under; and we are satisfied that lemon juice accomplished it." We go in for lemons! we do.

A Hint for Washing Day.

A little pipeclay dissolved in the water employed in washing, will clean the dirtiest linen thoroughly, with about one-half the labour, and full one-half less soap. Besides, the cloths will be improved in color.

Bee Moth.

Where peach leaves, pounded with salt, are put under a bee hive, I have not seen a bee-moth. Although my hives have heretofore suffered much from this source, the adoption of this plan has caused the moths to come out missing.—Prairie Farmer.

A New Preserve.

A correspondent sends us the following: "I have lately been very busy making a new kind of preserve, which, I may say, is quite a discovery, to me at least, and which promises to insure me a plentiful supply of good, wholesome jam, for my family during the winter, at a price below the usual cost of preserves. I was, the other day, making some ordinary apple jam, and before finishing it, put it in some blackberry juice, in order to give it a little color, and I was surprised at finding how much the preserve was improved by the addition; so much so, that it might very easily be mistaken for damson jam. And as you will see, by the following proportions, the cost must be very small, wherever apples and blackberries are to be got. I put two quarts of the juice of blackberries—that is, I bring the berries up to a simmer for five minutes, and then strain them through a coarse cloth—about six pounds' weight of cut apples, and one pound of crushed lump sugar, and stew it up in the usual way, till the apples are softened down, and the mass becomes of the usual thickness. It is wholesome and good, and I thought that what was within any one's reach, ought to be known.—Godey's Lady's Book.

Paste that is Paste.

Dissolve an ounce of alum in a quart of warm water; when cold, add as much flour as will make it the consistence of cream; then strew into it as much powdered rosin as will stand on a shilling, and two or three cloves; boil it to a consistence, stirring all the time. It will keep for twelve months, and when dry, may be softened with water.

To Preserve Meat from Insects.

Make a solution of black pepper and molasses, and rub it well on the meat; then hang it up and smoke again. The bugs will not even crawl over it. A tea cup full of pepper, finely ground, and thoroughly mixed with one gallon of molasses, will preserve over one thousand pounds of meat.

Preserving Eggs.

The best way is to cover each egg with a coat of varnish, which renders them impervious to the air, and when dry, pack them in barrels, with the small end down, with oats enough to fill the interstices and prevent them from breaking. Keep them in a cool, dry cellar.

A Free Colored Boy in a Slave Dungeon.

Isaac Roberts, a free colored boy of Ohio, is now confined in prison in New Orleans as a runaway slave. The boy formerly resided in Harveysburgh in the Southwestern part of the State. The following account of the proceedings of a meeting in that place for his release we find in the Wilmington Independent:

At a meeting of the Citizens of Harveysburgh and vicinity, held in said place on the 7th inst., for the purpose of effecting the release of Isaac Roberts, a free colored boy of Ohio, now imprisoned as a runaway slave in the City of New Orleans. Wm. Sabin presided, and Charles Hurd, was appointed secretary. The following preamble and resolution was adopted.

Whereas from authentic information through a Mr. Foster, a resident lawyer of New Orleans, That Isaac Roberts a free colored boy of Ohio and formerly a resident of this place has been imprisoned since the 12th of March last, in the Negro Dungeons of that city, as a runaway slave, and according to the laws of the State, will be sold into Slavery, if not released against the 12th of September next to pay the jail fees and attendant expenses, (which are estimated at $200.) And further according to the laws of said State, it will be necessary in order to effect his release, that some persons go there to identify him.

Therefore, Resolved, To effect this object, that a Committee be appointed to solicit subscriptions through various sections of the country amongst the friends of freedom for the redemption and attendant expenses thereto, and also to obtain the services of some suitable persons to go to the City of New Orleans immediately and negotiate for his release.

The Committee are:—J. T. Burgess, Wm. Ham, S. D. Harvey, Charles Hurd, Clark Nickerson, Isaac Harvey, J. W. Chaffin, I. Taylor.

On behalf of the committee.

A Slave Released by the British Authorities in Jamaica.

Intelligence has been received at Baltimore that the cook of the Young America, a Baltimore vessel, has been released at Savannah la Mar, in the Island of Jamaica, by the negroes, while the authorities coolly looked on, and countenanced the act.

Another account says that the slave had shipped under an assumed name, and with a borrowed free paper; that the captain tried to conceal him, but the blacks bore him off in triumph.

When he reached the shore, a magistrate asked him if he were free, or a slave, to which he replied, "I am a slave." "Then," replied the magistrate, "in the name of Her Majesty, the Queen, I now declare that you are free, and at liberty, having landed on British soil." The decision was fully confirmed on the next day.

An English Slaveholder.

Lord Brougham has presented a petition to the British House of Lords, praying for the removal of the present Lord High Commissioner, on the ground that he owns a plantation and slaves in Dutch Guinea.

Runaways in Canada.

The Canadians are beginning to experience some of the results of the abolitionism, in the United States, which they have done so much to create and foster. The "underground" railroad, upon which runaway slaves escaped from the Southern States, and transported to the frontier, is loosing popularity among those to whom it delivers so many unwelcome burdens. The number of arrivals is already inconvenient, and the prospect of increase is creating alarm. The Canadian press complains that these blacks are coming in too fast for "the good of the Province." "People may talk about the horrors of slavery as much as they please," says the Colonist, "but fugitive slaves are by no means a desirable class of immigrants for Canada." The few, comparatively, who have already reached there, are a source of trouble, and the many coming are a source of alarm for the future. The crime of abetting robbery in the United States, is thus beginning to bear some of its legitimate fruits, and to inflict just penalties on the robbers and their accomplices. The ignorant and helpless, whom they have aided to seduce from comfort, are a heavy charge for the seducers, and the burden begins to be felt as oppressive, and is growing indefinitely. The thrifty Northerner of the free States of the Union, has concluded, it seems, to rid himself of the heaviest portion of the cost of these spoliation enterprises. He is too shrewd to encumber himself with the support of the runaways whom he entices from their homes to cast them upon British protection. He will work to get them away from their masters, hurrying them out of the country, but he will not keep them about him, nor tax himself to support them. On the contrary, in many States, he legislates against them, fences himself around with legal and social barriers, to escape from equality or contact, or association with them or their class. Where he is they are a despised, corrupted, vicious and decaying caste; and he accordingly helps them as fast as he can to get into the British dominions, and abandons them to British charity, in a strange country, under inclement skies, without means or capacity to provide for themselves.

For a season our British neighbors were willing to receive these fugitives, although it is not clear that they ever enlisted themselves to provide for their guests. They did not at first feel the inconvenience of this motley immigration, nor anticipate to what a magnitude it might swell. It was a gratification to the pride of British colonists to be able to exhibit themselves in the attitude of protectors of refugees from the United States; and they plumed themselves pharisaically on their superior sanctity. They had, too, we doubt not, a real portion of the anti-slavery fanaticism, which the imperial authorities have indulged in at so terrible cost themselves, and have cultivated so seduously as a means of depressing the character and influence, and lessoning the material prosperity of the United States. Slavery emancipation has become a British boast, and the colonists very naturally fell into the habit and were willing to encounter some cost for the indulgence of the national vanity and the spirit of propagandism. Prejudices, delusion and conceit have concurred to make the Canadians hitherto ostentatiously tender to the abolitionism of the United States a refuge for the negro runaways.

This was all well for a while, till the pressure began to be felt slightly and the coming burdens to be seen and estimated. While the number were few and the cases of inconvenience only occasional, it could be borne without wincing. It was something to brag of which cost but little. It served to point an arrogant sarcasm against a rival people, and to feed the conceit of a fancied superiority, while the principal, almost the only sufferers were the poor victims of cruel experimenting—the wretches who shivered and starved along the frontier, or herded in abject and unregarded destitution within the territory.

But the cost and consequences are more than they have bargained for in the indulgence heretofore of a cheap and gasconading philanthropy. The inward tide of immigration grows troublesomely large, and the prospect of further and steady increase begins to vex the authorities. It is no longer a small matter for Canada, and some Canadians are looking into it with very grave forebodings. The impression on the vast mass of this sort of population in the United States is yet imperceptible, but Canada already feels the dangers of the threatened irruption. They see there that long before the work of emancipation could possibly accomplish one-tenth of its labors in the United States, Canada would be overrun with the emancipated whom the slave States would drive out and the free States would not harbor. The signs of discontent with this prospect, elicited by the evils distinguishable at the ingress of these first few runaways, are already conspicuous; and before long we shall hear of some legislative proposition to protect the Canadians from the nuisance. It will find support in the practice by all governments of excluding the paupers and criminals of other nations from its shores. It will find a justification even in the eyes of humanity in the determination to prevent an accumulation within the Canadas of a large number of unacclimated blacks suddenly freed from all the restraints of authority to which they have been subject for a life-time, ignorant, prone to vice and sent into an ungenial land, without inclination to labor, means of support or capacity to provide for themselves.

If these growing alarms in Canada should have their effect in a provision by law for keeping this class of population out of the province, and turning them back upon the hands of the Northern kidnapper or conductor through whom the fugitives now escape to Canada, it would be a result not unreasonably to be expected. As a measure of self protection Canada may very justly exact that the liberators of slaves should take care of them, and bear the cost of their own spontaneous philanthropy. She may very properly expect that Ohio, New York and Michigan shall retain within their own limits, and support with their own means, the fugitives from the South, whom they protect against the owner and assist in escaping from their homes. We have our own private doubts whether the abolitionism of the North would not lose a good deal of its vigor if it had to bear the costs out of its own means, and could not throw the burden and the annoyances upon others, whether if those men could be made to put their own theories into actual progres, be compelled to practice the doctrines they teach, to live with and sustain the runaway negro, and furnish a full return to him for all the comforts they have instigated him to abandon, there would not be a great deal less hypocritical sympathy for contented blacks, and a juster appreciation in acts of the condition, comforts and rights of the white races of the United States.

The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel. Never was this saying more lamentable true than when applied to the philanthropic meddlings of abolitionism, domestic and external, with the condition of the American slave. They make his bondage more hopeless, and surround it with privations of which they create the necessity; and every instance of the success in detaching some individual from the mass of his kindred and fellows, in the position for which alone he is fitted, is a piece of real inhumanity to him, and helps to bring down the curse of retribution upon themselves.—Picayune.

Prospects of the South.

Some time since a short paragraph appeared in this journal, amongst other items, in which an opinion was expressed, that fugitive slaves were "by no means a desirable class of immigrants for Canada." We took occasion at the time to explain, that the remark was intended to apply solely to those, who, by the brutalizing effects of their past position, and the deprivation of Christian education, were really unfit to be entrusted with the rights of freemen, in a country where freedom is so largely developed as in Canada. We expressed no opinion adverse to the encouragement of a respectable colored immigration, whether slaves or otherwise; and certainly we had no idea of refusing a place of refuge to any man, whatever his deficiencies or vices, whose position as a refugee from the tyranny of tyrannies—personal slavery—gave him a pre-eminent claim upon every feeling of humanity. With these few remarks, we cheerfully insert below a communication:

To the Editor of the Colonist.

Good Mr. Editor,—What were you thinking of when you let slip such a paragraph as that about fugitives: was it in some fit of inspiration, or merely a chance remark. Be as it may, you have acquired a wide-spread popularity by it. It was a perfect God-send to Southerners,—every paper in the land has copied it with apropriate remarks.—"A British journal" saying that British soil ought not to be the home and refuge of the oppressed, that Britain was weary of her "man stealing," and property might be secured even if they did have to face Northern abolitionists. Canada is returning to a sense of justice, and will soon be the ally of the South. They have really found a "mare's nest" in your paragraph.

Do you intend taking a trip South this summer—if so, just write another such paragraph, and then "chalk your hat." "The rejoicing over the one sheep that was lost" would be nothing to it.

It may be a fact as you say, that fugitive slaves are not exactly the emigration to encourage. But why not? True they bring little capital; and are little able, without direction, to set up for themselves; yet is not that the case with much of the emigration from the old country. They bring strong backs and willing minds, and is there any evidence to shew that they will not make a valuable acquisition to the population of the country.

You may suppose I may have some connection with the "Under Ground Railroad," but such is not the case. I have been among slaves for a year, and have never before said or written against the system, but have thought the more. With all the palliating circumstances half the evils have not been told. It is a double curse, a curse to the race enslaved and to the masters. They may tell of the noble and generous feelings, the love of learning, the chivalry and chastity of Southerners,—it is all bragadocia. A Southerner at home is a tyrant, impetuous and overbearing; he is wanting in that true courage, that makes men calmly front danger, and his honor and chastity are never mentioned. The town is supplied with some learned men, and some gentlemen, but the country is filled with ignorance and vice. From his childhood up the slaveholder gratifies every brutal passion of his nature: and who are the victims of his brutality, his slaves, men and women, who in all but color are his superiors. This is no over-drawn picture. Now and then one of these "chattels" by dint of perseverance escapes, and do you refuse a foot of land in the only asylum this side the grave? It cannot be, it must have been only a slip of the pen and not the heart that dictated such a paragraph. Slaves many of them long for liberty and know the toils and pains of it, they are not contented, as they will tell when there is an ear that they dare tell their complaints in.

A fearful day of retribution is coming, the disunion of these States is as sure as their present union, and at no distant date. The late Kansas outrage demonstrates that this is no longer a land of freedom, even to the whites, and this will hasten the crisis.

Anarchy and confusion will follow. But one train of intelligence, and one spark of knowledge is wanting now, to make the millions of bondmen rise on their masters. It is the fear of this that makes the South so fearful that intelligence may be disseminated among the blacks. Insurrection of slaves is a thing but little talked of, but I have seen brave men grow pale as some one whispered it.

The elephant, ignorant and docile, is led by a tiny cord, an apt emblem of slavery at present, but the enraged brute destroying, all before it will be the emblem by and by. There are men here who fear this and know it, and forsee it approaching with disunion. It is slave-holding America that is the ally of slave-holding Russia.

They may say Uncle Tom's Cabin is a fiction, an exaggeration. But with little variation every plantation could furnish all the materials and much more that could not be written.

It is my prayer that Canada may encourage such emigration, and always afford an asylum to the slave, and I trust too, that it will be so until an asylum is provided nearer by.

Yours, &c.,
B. R. Finch.

British Slaveholders.

The following petition was presented to the House of Lords by Lord Brougham:

'To the Right Hon. the Peers of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

'The petition of the committee of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society humbly showeth:—

'That your petitioners have learned with deep pain, that there are, at the present time, several British subjects proprietors of plantations and slaves in the colony of Surinam, Dutch Guiana, and that one of these British slaveholders now occupies a high official position under Her Majesty's government.

'That your petitioners are fully aware of the difficulty of dealing with the question of the holding of slaves by British subjects in foreign countries, especially when, as may be presumed in the present instance, the slaves thus acquired may be inherited; but your petitioners nevertheless consider it to be an infraction of the moral principle on which are founded the various acts for the abolition of the slave trade and of slavery, passed by the British legislature, that subject should not, under any circumstances, be permitted to hold slaves in any country whatever.

'That, while it is painful to your petitioners to be compelled to allude to individual cases, they nevertheless feel it to be their duty to express their deep regret, that Her Majesty's government should have selected a slaveholder to fill the office of High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, and would respectfully submit that this fact cannot but tend greatly to weaken the moral effect of any remonstrance the government may present to foreign cabinets on the subject of the slave trade, and is calculated to cast discredit on the sincerity of the efforts that are being made to overthrow the system of slavery.

'Under these circumstances, and seeing that the parties referred to are, either by themselves or by their agents, involved in the immoral practice of dealing in the persons of their fellow-creatures for the purpose of keeping up the number of slaves on their plantations—a traffic which violates every tie of humanity and every principle of religion—your petitioners would earnestly pray that your lordships would be pleased to take this case into your serious consideration, with a view to adopt such measures as may appear desirable, in order to remove from Her Majesty's government the stigma of employing a slaveholder as the representative of British sovereignty, and also adopt such further measures as may be requisite to prevent the continuance of the evil practices referred to on the part of British subjects.'—Liberator.

NOTICE.

The Shareholders and Managers of the Provincial Freeman are requested to meet at Chatham, on the 2nd Tuesday in October, without fail.

By order.
M. A. Shadd,
Agent.

PROVINCIAL FREEMAN.

CHATHAM, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 29, 1855.

☞ Dr. Jesse Burke is authorized to receive Subscriptions for this paper, and to give Receipts for the same.

☞ Mr. Moses Viney is authorized to act as Agent for this paper in the State of New York.

☞ Rev. R. M. Johnson, is authorized to receive subscriptions for this paper.

☞ Rev. Richard Preston, of Halifax, N.S., is authorized to act as Agent, to receive Monies, and give receipts for the same.

APPEAL.

To love a people, they must be known; hence the importance and necessity of those means, that give such information. The "Provincial Freeman" is the means by which, the Colored people of this Province, particularly, are to be made known to each other, to the citizens of this Government, and to the people of the world. And as it is the duty of human beings to love each other, and as such love is based upon knowledge, it follows that it is their duty to know one other. In view of such truth, we appeal to all, who feel and to them, who would feel their obligations arising from human relation, to aid in the support of the "Provincial Freeman."

We might appeal to passion and interest, in support of so good a cause, but we disdain to do that, judging it better to simply call attention to our duty as a people, to make ourselves known, and the duty of others to become acquainted with us. And so much we believe, you will do; hence, we urge you to forward your names, and the names of all others you can get, as subscribers, for the Freeman, with the money in advance.

☞ The subscribers of the Provincial Freeman are requested to call at the Office, Charity's Brick Buildings, King Street, for their papers, until such time as a suitable person can be obtained as Carrier, and we can learn the residences of subscribers. Persons living in the country will please call at the Post Office.

Owing to the scarcity of hands, and other unavoidable circumstances, incidental to moving, it will be impossible to get out the paper on the day of publication for a short time.

The Chatham Meeting and Dawn.

The meeting on Monday night, in this Town, was very large and enthusiastic. The house was filled to its utmost capacity, and many were outside about the door and windows. The object of the meeting was to hear the defence of Mr. Josiah Henson, sen., against certain statements made by Mr. Jas. C. Brown, about Mr. Henson and his connection with the Dawn School, in a public meeting some time since, and to give Mr. Brown an opportunity to refute certain slanderous charges preferred by Mr. Henson against Mr. Brown, in answer to his statements.

We are happy to be able to say, that Mr. Brown sustained his former statements, with incontestable testimony and met the slanderous charges of his opponent; and overthrew them, to the perfect satisfaction of all, but Mr. Henson's few friends, and covered his antagonist with confusion and shame, (we wish we could say with humiliation,) as was evinced by the overwhelming applause frequently given to Mr. Brown, as the fatal strokes fell upon his adversary, from his giant intellect.

The defence of Mr. Henson was a mere evasion of the real points at issue, and an apparent effort to divert the minds of the unthinking, from the truth at stake, and after having occupied the time very much longer than Mr. Brown, without saying but little to the point, an adjournment was moved, which resulted pretty much in the silence of Mr. Henson. Before the meeting adjourned, however, John Scoble was called for, who gave us a long egotical harangue, about his twenty-five years of faithful labor for the colored people. He wished us to know that he thought it an honor for him to stoop to even consider our cause as colored people! Poor mortal! We judge he is not much better than Jesus, who did not forget us. He informed us, that he considered it our duty to consult his Lord-ship, even as to the propriety of our holding a public meeting to consult about our own interest, &c. yes, even in little common sense things, we must confer with him. He should have known that many of our brethren who have come from the land of bondage, are his masters in common sense; and that it is infinitely more befitting him to consult them, in such cases. He should not have forgotten either, that we knew that he was and is paid—yes, and well paid for his serwces in the Anti-Slavery cause. Ah! even more, that "personal and family consideration" brought him to Canada. He was hissed, while speaking, for his impudence and conceit!

He gave us to understand that he was the sole proprietor, in trust, of the Dawn property, and that he intended to do pretty much as he pleased, if the colored people would not consent to be governed by him, &c.

He was informed that we had but little need of such a superhuman creature as he is, or would make us believe he is, and that we preferred, as a laborer among us, a Man!—a being with a soul in him; and as to his doing as he pleased with the Dawn property, that the law of the country would have to determine that point.

His statement that the Rev. Hiram Wilson had made no report of his receipts and expenditure, as agent for Dawn, we know to be untrue. We differ somewhat with Mr. Wilson, but we will defend him in the right. He has been badly treated. He has done, and suffered much for our brethren, and it should not be forgotten. We believe him to be a Christian gentleman, if not free from error. We really wish that John Scoble could be compared with Mr. Wilson, in manifestation of love to God and man. We rejoice that God has spared Mr. Wilson to see what we have often told him, that a certain negro "would rule or ruin" the Dawn School.

SLAVERY AND LABOR.

Hear the world-renowned, and, justly too, Horace Greely, in his inimatable Lecture at New York and Boston.

"The man who in New York or New England, most intelligently, devotedly, and efficiently, strives to elevate, recompense, and dignify Labor—he is, of all New Yorkers, of all New Englanders, the most effective foe to Southern Slavery." The same will be equally true of the Canadians. But what does the big-hearted Horace mean? He says: "You, my Lord Crœsus! who pays your tradesmen so justly and readily, do you, or do you not, quietly assume that they are socially your inferiors, merely because they are tradesmen? You, my Lady Maximum! would you fall into hysterics at the tidings that your daughter was engaged to some retailer or clerk—merely because of his business or position?" And, we add, ye whites, merely because of his color? You have the meaning.

In the same lecture of the cosmopolite, he adds a few words to "the Black of the Free States," which will apply with even more force to the colored Canadians. He remarks: "They, too, have a responsibility to shoulder, a work to perform, in aid of Universal Freedom—a work that taxes other muscles than those of the windpipe. It behooves them to hear and comprehend that the strongest argument in defence of Slavery was never uttered by any Calhoun, or McDuffie, Dew, or Tucker, by any broker D. D., or party hack whatever, but set forth in the person of this able-bodied negro, cowering, and shivering in a Northern alms-house, and that one skulking around to the back-door of some grand hotel for his daily basket of broken victuals. The argument for Universal Freedom lack nothing in the way of logic—never did lack anything in that quarter—while it suffers every day for want of sufficient demonstration that the African is competent to the formation of an industrious, virtuous, intelligent, civilized, thrifty, and progressive body politic. I do not say, that no evidence of this kind has been afforded; but simply, that very much more is needed, and would prove of essential service. If the colored population of Boston or New York would this day resolve—not to throw razors and blacking brushes at once, to the moles and the bats, but to wield them henceforth only as means of working out of the spheres of servitude and contempt, in which they have hitherto lived, not indeed into that of indolent luxury and pomp, but into one of independent labor and thrift, they would therein strike a more damaging blow at Slavery than has been dealt by all Ethiopean orators, convention, and mass meetings, since the day of Ham. And to this end, they need not expatriate themselves to Africa or to Hayti. [He don't say Canada.] Liberia is well in its way; but we need Liberias wherever there are blacks, and wherever the prejudice of caste or color remain unradicated. Talk not of poverty or inexperience, unfitness, or inefficiency—the boy must take to the water, before he knows that he can swim, or he will never learn. There is, probably, more wealth among the Blacks of this country to-day, than the Israelites took with them into the wilderness, on their way to Canaan—including all they borrowed of the Egyptians, and were in too great hurry to return. Let the Blacks of any Free State quietly concentrate their efforts and means, and buy up a township of its soil—let them begin with a school district, if unable to pay for a township—and let them settle that domain compactly, from their own ranks—starting manufactures and mechanic arts, as well as agriculture, and hiring the best procurable masters to guide them in the outset of their operations, so as to do every thing with the greatest economy, and in the highest perfection, if not at first with the utmost efficiency; and they will thus do more in one year of heroic, devoted toil for the overthrow of Slavery, than their whole race have effected in half a century. Not that their right to Liberty is not perfect, even though Freedom should prove a damage to most of them, as it does to many white men; but to overcome the resistance of pride, and selfishness, and indolence, we must be prepared to meet and vanquish illogical, as well as rational cavils. Give us one township inhabited wholly, or mainly by Blacks, yet eminently temperate, intelligent, thrifty, and progressive—equal to what a township mainly of Quakers now is—and, we will do more with the township for the destruction of Slavery, than can be done with all the speeches ever made, the books ever written. And there does not, at this hour, exist one invincible impediment, insurmountable by the Blacks themselves, to the creation of such a township."

Our esteemed friend, begs of us, not to regard him "one-sided, mechanical and narrow, because he states these truths." Well, we will not, for, we believe his soul is too big for that. We wish he had said "Colored People," instead of "Free Blacks." He meant well, no doubt, but our friends ought not to forget that we have been made a sensitive people, and that anything like reproach destroys confidence.

If so much can be done by our colored brethren of the United States, there, where they are deprived nearly of every right, and treated more like brutes than brothers, what might they not accomplish for themselves, their brethren "in bonds," and their race, were they to move to Canada, "where colored men are free," and enjoy all the right, &c., that British born citizens do, when they become naturalized?

And, if our people, of the hypocritical Republic, can and might do so much for "Universal Freedom?" what may not, we do, for the same, of this Monarchy of Freemen. We have not made the above quotation and remarks, because we are partial to Black governments, communities, churches, or schools.

We have never considered it any particular honor to associate with white people, simply because, they are such. We are brothers. We hold, that we can and ought to make our position physically, intellectually, and morally, as well as, politically, and socially, such, that, our white brethren would, as naturally and readily seek our association, as, we would theirs. It seems disgraceful to us, to ask more than equal rights of any people, and thank God, such we have here.

Correspondence.

For the Provincial Freeman.

Mr. Editor,—You will please give insertion, in the columns of your valuable paper to the following Minutes of a Meeting held in this town on the evening of the 27th inst. in the Rev. H. H. Hawkins' Church, in relation to certain statements preferred against Mr. J. C. Brown, by Mr. Josiah Henson, at a previous meeting respecting the affairs of the Dawn Institute.

Mr. J. W. Hill was called to the Chair.

After prayer, by the Rev. Henry Garrett, Mr. J. C. Brown addressed the audience in a very pathetic manner, noticing certain charges in relation to his Trustee duties. He presented letters, one from Mr. Hiram Wilson, another from Mr. Joseph C. Lewis, and other written documents, evincing, very conclusively, his integrity as Trustee.

Mr. Josiah Henson failing to establish or authenticate his charges against Mr. Brown, the Rev. John Scoble was called upon to make a simple statement of the facts in relation to the Dawn affairs at the present time, which he did in a very fluent manner.

The Rev. Wm. P. Newman followed with a few explanatory remarks, dissenting from the preceding speaker.

Miss M. A. Shadd, also, dissenting from the Rev. Mr. Scoble, addressed the meeting for a few minutes, in a very lucid and appropriate manner.

After which, the following resolution was offered, and almost unanimously adopted:—

Resolved,—That whereas, Mr. Josiah Henson has failed to authenticate the validity of any of his charges against Mr. Brown, that this Meeting endorse the conduct of the triumphant defender of the Dawn property.

The meeting then adjourned, at the late hour of half past twelve o'clock.

J. W. Hill, Chairman.
H. C. Jackson, Secretary.
Chatham, Aug. 27th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Mr. Editor,—The facts below are well known to you, but as your distant readers may not know, I dot them down as they happened, for their information.

A large and highly interesting meeting was held on Monday evening last, the 27th inst., at the Rev. H. H. Hawkins' Church, to examine into statements preferred against Mr. J. C. Brown, by Mr. Josiah Henson, at a former meeting, and to investigate the affairs of the Dawn Institute. Mr. Brown, we are happy to say, swept away most effectually the cobweb suspicions aroused by the assertions of his opponents, and brought in his defence indisputable documentary proof. A lengthy reply from Mr. Henson, unfortunately elicited no new point, and failed to sustain satisfactorily his first attacks, although backed by the testimony of Peter B. Smith.

Mr. Scoble was also on the boards, and in his usual happy manner, told how many years he had been working for the colored people, and otherwise referred particularly to himself; spoke of Dawn, the Trusteeship vested in him, and his heirs and assigns forever, of the direlict colored people in Canada—the ingrates! who, instead of publishing their contemplated Convention on the Market-house, Court-house, Bridges, &c., as they did, should have taken the more public one of sending the Call to himself; of course, their claim to the Dawn was denied—it neither belonged to the colored people, himself, nor any one; but was only held in trust vested in his heirs and assigns, without owners, and could not have any. He enumerated all the Trustees who transferred it to him, yet he could not give it back, nor in fact make it over to any one else. Poor man! Like the slaveholders with slaves, it was a clear disadvantage to him; but he had not the power to get rid of it. He was Trustees, Secretary, Treasurer, Possessor and all! If the colored people attempted to hold their convention, he assured them they might become involved in the law; but when assured that legal formalities necessary were complied with, he told them that they might hold their meeting if they would behave properly. The forward children!

His remarks, which were lengthy, self-laudatory, disparaging to the colored people, and "assuming," terminated by a decided call of the house for the Rev. W. P. Newman, to give the other side of the question; when the gentleman abruptly left, after a failure to gag Mr. Newman, by calling for more questions, with a trail or train of soft shells, sons of color, composed of a superannuated old clothes agent, a barber that would not shave colored men in his day and generation, a faithful servant or two, and a good farmer with a bad memory.

A resolution was then passed, congratulating Mr. Brown on the successful vindication of his character; after which, the meeting adjourned.

During the meeting, quite a spirited passage at arms, took place between Mr. Cary, of Dawn, and Rev. H. J. Young. The former charging the people with bad manners towards Mr. Henson, for signifying their doubts of the force of his flimsy testimony, by rather mirthful demonstrations and their contempt for humbug, by some loud questions and answers; and the latter nobly vindicated them. Such scenes, though to be deprecated, will continue so long as parties beg for the colored people, and others get the benefit.

Man about Town.

Chatham, Aug. 29th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman.

Friend Freeman:—Since I last wrote to you, I have changed my residence. I am no more a resident of Chatham, but have become a dweller in the lovely town of Shrewsbury (Round-Eau).

Shrewsbury is situated on the beautiful fishing ground, called the Round-Eau, which empties itself into Lake Erie, by which natural circumstance, it is made a splendid harbor for vessels; and in times of storms, when Lake Erie is very rough, vessels make in here for safety. Already, this season, some eight or ten vessels have loaded in this harbor, with lumber and staves, which is as yet the only article of merchandise that call them here.

In this Town Plot, it is said, there is some five or six hundred acres; and, from what I can learn, a Town has been in contemplation for some time, but as yet, it has not made much progress. A survey of the Town was made some five or eight years ago, laying out the entire plot in Town Lots, of half an acre each; the most of which, including the best and most valuable, have been bought up by the land jobbers of various parts of the country, and not by active settlers, which is one of the reasons why this Town has made so little progress. The jobbers are doing nothing with their lots, only waiting for them to advance in price, so as to obtain two or three prices for them.

In arranging the sales of these lots, in my weak judgment, appears to be a great oversight in Government, not to have fixed upon some settlement duties that would compel owners to improve their lots, which would supercede the execution of a threat made by the assessor of taxes, that he intended to double the taxes year by year, until owners of lots will be obliged to improve or sell, or he will sell for taxes to those who will improve them.

The number of houses in this town plot now, is only five; one frame dwelling house, covered with boards, but is intended before long to be covered with shingles; its owner is Mr. Thomas Bond; him and his family appear to be very sociable and kind, so far as my limited observation extends.

Mr. Bond wishes to sell his property, and I am very sorry for it, for he has every appearance of a friendly good neighbor, though I always wish every one to act according to the dictates of their own notions, so as to serve their own best interest.

The next house is Mr. Timothy Kelly's, containing one half acre of ground; the building is built of round log; there is also a log stable upon this property. Mr. Kelly is said to be the oldest inhabitant in the Town; his family takes care of the light-house, at the mouth of this harbor; but since the sale of the wharf (Lucan's wharf) by the Government, to a Yankee company, everything is going to rack, even the light-house has been abandoned, and no light kept, and without some repairs soon to the wharf, it will be down, for it is sinking as fast as time is passing.

The Tavern stand is a building built of round logs, it has passed the hands of several owners since its erection, and at present it is owned by Messrs. Blew & McKinney. It has all the necessary buildings and out buildings called for by the Tavern Law. After Messrs. Blew & McKinney had taken possession of the property, Mr. McKinney in his zeal to add one more dwelling to the catalogue of buildings, went to work to clean, and half demolish an old log stable to turn it into a dwelling, and after some three or four weeks pottering about it, left it in a half demolished state, which building now presents the most disagreeable appearance of any building on the Town plot. The Custom House is a very neat building, built of hewed logs, very neatly costructed, something similar to the dwelling of Mr. King's at Buxton; this, alas, is going to wreck for want of care and use. This building, I suppose is the property of the Government.

All the above mentioned buildings (except Blew's & McKinney's half demolished, and Mr. Killey's stables) are all on Bro k street, which is the main street leading to the Queen's Wharf.

On William street, is a log shanty, for such its owner calls it, Lorenza Lewis is his name; he says, he owns six lots; but this is best known to himself. Mr. Lewis is given to very intemperate habits, other than this, no doubt he would make a good citizen.

There was one more house on Brock St., Lot No. 2., owned by Mr. Addison Smith, burnt by some incendiary to prevent his moving to it, and also to intimidate colored people from settling in this section of the country, Shrewsbury in particular.

Mr. Smith is not intimidated, nor discouraged; he is prepairing to rebuild, and since they burned his house, he has bought another lot that joined him, which places him on the corner of the main street in the Town, (Brock St.) So the burning of his house instead of discouraging him, it has increased his efforts two-fold. So much for envy, "it always punishes itself."

Of the inhabitants, I must try and find time, after a while, to give you a slight description of them, and for fear you may have occasion to complain of my length, as you d'd before, I close, remaining

Yours, most respectfully,
H.

Improvement of Colored People.

At the recent semi-annual examination of the State Normal school in Salem, the following Hymn was sung, being the production of Miss C. L. Forten, a young colored pupil:—

In the earnest path of duty,
With high hopes and hearts sincere,
We to useful lives aspiring,
Daily meet to labor here.

No vain dreams of earthly glory,
Urge us onward to explore
Far extending realms of knowledge,
With their rich and varied store;

But, with hope of aiding others,
Gladly we perform our part;
Nor forget, the mind, while storing,
We must educate the heart,—

Teach it hatred of oppression,
Truest love of God and man;
Thus our high and holy calling
May accomplish His great plan.

Not the great and gifted only
He appoints to do his will,
But each one, however lowly,
Has a mission to fulfil.

Knowing this, toil we unwearied,
With true hearts and purpose high;—
We would win a wreath immortal,
Whose bright flowers ne'er fade and die.

Diplomas have just been awarded to a colored girl in the High School at Portsmouth, N. H., and also to a young colored lad at one of the Boston Public Schools, to which he) though the only colored among the white boys found) had secured access but a few months since.

This year's graduating class at Dartmouth College, contained one colored young man, (Edward Garrison Draper.) The Class procured lithographic portraits of each other, to exchange fraternally, and to give color to their consistency, Draper's was among them as a brother beloved.

A colored aspirant for classical knowledge has just obtained admittance to a literary Institution in Connecticut, after many years' refusal by the Faculty.

In the city of Boston there are gratifying tokens that prejudice against color is not invincible. One large business firm has now employed in their counting-room a colored book-keeper. There are colored clerks, also, in other stores. A colored Auctioneer has just been licensed by the city authorities. I recently met a colored boy in the street, who seemed much elated as he told me that a white machinist had agreed to take him as an apprentice.

There is a man in Boston, a young colored man, (William Simpson,) whose success as a crayon artist is eliciting praise from those best qualified to judge. Several portraits of well known individuals have been executed by him with remarkable fidelity and finish.

Lewis Hayden's new store on the corner of Cambridge and North Russell streets,—where, in addition to his usual Furnishing Stock, may be found jewelry, silver ware, &c.,—reflects credit upon himself and those with whom he is complexionally identified in this country.

Each fact above stated—and others could be given—is worth more than elaborate arguments in proof of the certain—even if slow—yielding of the public sentiment to the colored man's claims, and should stimulate him to a higher ambition than to be merely what may be considered well for a colored man; but rather refusing to be satisfied with less than perfection in his honest calling.

Kansas Legislature.

True Idea of Yankee Freedom.

On the 10 inst., the Kansas House of Representatives considered the act to punish offences against slave property. The bill had previously been referred to a committee, and they reported a substitute, which, and being ordered not to be printed, was read thrice and passed—yeas, 24; nays none. Death is the penalty of almost every offence.

An act to punish offences against slave property.

Sec. 1. Every person, bond or free, convicted of raising a rebellion of slaves, free negroes or mulattoes—shall suffer death.

Sec. 2. Every free person who shall aid in any rebellion of slaves, &c., or do any overt act in furtherance thereof—shall suffer death.

Sec. 3. If any free person shall by speaking, writing, or printing, advise, induce, &c., any slaves to rebel, conspire against or murder any citizen of Kansas, or shall import or aid in importing such documents, he shall suffer death.

Sec. 4. If any person shall entice, decoy, or carry out of Kansas any slave belonging to another, with intent to deprive the owner thereof of the services of such slave, or procure the freedom of such slave, he shall suffer death, or be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than ten years.

Sec. 5. If any person shall assist in enticing, &c., (as above)—he shall suffer deaf , or be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than ten years.

Sec. 6. If any person shall entice or carry away out of any State or Territory of the United States, any slave * * and shall bring such slave to this territory, &c., * * he shall suffer death, or be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than ten years.

Sec. 7. If any person shall entice any slave to escape from the service of his master or owner * * or shall aid any slave in escaping * * be shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than five years.

Sec. 8. If any person in this territory shall aid or harbor any escaped slave from another State * * such persons shall be punished in like manner as if such slave had escaped from his master in this territory.

Sec. 9. If any person shall resist any officer while attempting to arrest any slave that may have escaped * * or shall rescue such slave, or aid such slave to escape from the officer—the person so offending shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than two years.

Sec. 10. If any marshall, sheriff or constable, or the deputy of any such officer, shall, when required, refuse to aid or assist, in the aid or capture of any slave that may have escaped, such officers shall be fined not less than $100, nor more than $500.

Sec. 11. If any person print, write, introduce into, publish or circulate, or cause to be brought into, printed, written, published or circulated, or shall knowingly aid or assist in bringing into, printing, publishing, or circulating within this territory, any book, paper, &c., containing any statements, doctrines, &c. calculated to produce a disaffection among the slaves of this territory—he shall be punished by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than five years.

Sec. 12. If any free person, by speaking or by writing, assert or maintain, that persons have not the right to hold slaves in the territory, or shall introduce into Kansas, print, publish, write, circulate or cause to be introduced into the territory, written, printed or published, in this territory, any book, paper, magazine, pamphlet or circular, containing any denial of the rights of persons to hold slaves in this territory, such person shall be deemed guilty of felony, and punished by imprisonment at hard labor, for a term not less than two years.

Sec. 13. No person who is conscientiously opposed to holding slaves * * shall sit as juror, on the trial of any prosecution of any violation of any of the sections of this act.

Act to be in force after Sept. 15, 1855.

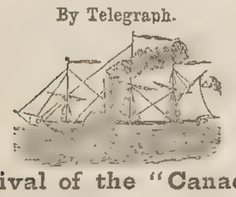
By Telegraph.



Arrival of the "Canada."

HIGHLY IMPORTANT NEWS.

GREAT BATTLE BETWEEN THE ALLIES AND THE RUSSIANS!

THE ALLIES VICTORIOUS.

5,000 Russians Killed and 4,000 Prisoners.

HALIFAX, Aug. 29.

The Steamer Canada arrived at an early hour this morning, with Liverpool dates to Saturday 18th.

The news is highly important.

The threatened bombardment was opened on the 4th, and continued uninterruptedly until the 11th. The losses of the Allies were trifling, while on the other side the destruction of property was immense.

In the Crimea, on the 10th inst., the Russians under Liprandi, attacked the lines of the Allies, on the Tschernaya. A desperate engagement of 3 hours duration ensued, when the Russians were repulsed with immense slaughter.

General Simpson has telegraphed to the British Government that the bombardment would be re-commenced on the 17th instant.

Queen Victoria was in France, paying her long contemplated visit to the Emperor.

SECOND DESPATCH.

The Baltic.

The French Admiral telegraphs from on board the Tourville, under date August 11th.

The bombardment of Sweaborg has been attended with complete success. An immense conflagration had taken place, which continued nearly 45 hours. All the storehouses, magazines and arsenal are in ruins. Various powder magazines and stores of projectiles blew up. The enemy has received a terrible blow. Our loss is insignificant in men; nothing in material. The crews are enthusiastic.

(Signed,) PENAUD.

Admiral Dundas's despatch is less highly colored, namely:—

Off Sweaborg, Aug. 11th.

Sweaborg was attacked by mortar and gun boats of the allied squadrons, on the morning of the 9th.

Firing ceased early this morning.

All principal buildings in Vargo, and many more in Stromtic, including those of dock yards and arsenal burned.

Few casualities have occurred. No loss in the allied fleet.

Russian despatches to St. Petersburg of 11th, say that the allied fleet opened a bombardment against Sweaborg, on the 9th, and continued it with energy until now.

Allied squadron went to Nargen on the 13th. No allied ships damaged seriously. British casualties—killed none; wounded 2. French loss equally trifling.

The Grand Duke Constantine asked permission from the Emperor to attack the diminished fleet before Cronstadt.

The Crimea.

The Russians attacked the Allied position on the Tchernaya, but were completely repulsed by the French and Sardinians. The Russian loss is estimated at 5,000 killed and about 4,000 prisoners were taken. Loss of the allies was small. Sardinians fought bravely. The Russians were in complete retreat on McKenzie's hill.

Sebastopol affairs unchanged.

Omar Pasha has been ordered to return to the Crimea, instead of Asia.

General Simpson telegraphs:—I have decided to open fire from our batteries at daybreak.

A St. Petersburg despatch says that Gortschakoff states he has orders to sink the Russian vessels at the Malakoff walls.

The latest despatch from Kars says that the city was surrounded, and the first parallel opened.

General Simpson of the same date gives details of a sortie on the Waranzoff road, which was unimportant.

Queen Victoria, escorted by ships of war, crossed to Boulogne on the 17th, and would remain in France six days.

The Duke of Somerset is dead.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, rear of Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, in the rear of Smith's Grocery, King Street East; any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a sys ematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

CAUTION.

FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangementas colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them.

Information Wanted

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. If she will call on or communicate by letter with Robert Phillips, Centre St., Toronto she will hear news of much importance relating to her property.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1841, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the greography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everythnig is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities, and while the work is in fact a popular treasure it stands seperately, as the results of philosophic investigation and finally, that while just care is ordered to the classic ages the whole work is written in the spirit of modern civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards Christian, rather than the soldier as the model of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one impeial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

ICE! ICE!! ICE!!!

THE Undersigned begs to return his best thanks to his Customers, for the liberal patronage he has received for the last nine years, and to announce that he has enlarged and added to the number of his ICE HOUSES, having now four, which are filled with pure and wholesome Spring Water Ice, from Yorkville. He is prepared to supply the same to Customers, by contract or otherwise, during the season, commencing from the 1st of June next. The Ice will be conveyed by waggon daily, to places within six miles of Toronto.

All orders sent to THOS. F. CARY, Hairdresser, Front Street, two doors from Church Street, will be punctually attended to.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR,

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as Attucks, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and latest prominent "black leaders" who [illegible] first spirit discovered in Columbus, that was [illegible] slavery—the pan ia—now Hay

Poetry.

HOME.

Oh, what is so sweet as a winter's night,
When the household work is done.
And the family gathers, where love and light
Bid sadness and gloom begone.

'Round the two leaved stead, the dear ones sit;
Some chat, others read, others sew;
Or the click of the needle's steady knit,
Tells of many an added row.

Speak not of the mirth of the busy crowd,
In the halls of revelry found,
For their reckless joke, and laughter loud
Compare not with joys so sound.

Oh, give me the pious and happy home,
Where the bond that unites is Love,
Where the will of the Holy One is done,
And his blessing sought from above!

Dedicated to the Cause of Freedom.

Tune—"Troubadour."

Sadly the fugitive weeps in his cell,
Listen awhile to the sorrowful tale;
Let us, yes, let us, listen, ye brave!
Every fair, lady fair, weep for the slave.

Praying for liberty, dearer than life,
Torn from little ones, torn from his wife,
Fleeing from slavery near him, and save;
Christian men, christian men, help the poor slave.

Think of his agony, feel for his pain,
Should his hard master e'er hold him again;
Spirits of liberty, rise from your graves,
Make him free, make him free, rescue the slave.

Freely the slave's master goes where he will,
Freemen stand ready his wish to fulfil;
Helping the tyrant, honest or knave,
Thinking not, caring not, for the poor slave.

Boast not of liberty, liberty is dead,
See the slave master's whip over your head,
Stooping beneath it, you ask what he craves,
Christian men, christian men, catch me my slaves.

Freemen, arouse ye before 'tis too late,
Slavery is knocking at every gate;
Make good the promise your early days gave,
Christian men, christian men, rescue the slave.

Let us Try to be Happy.

O! try to be happy! it is not for long
We shall cheer on each other by counsel or song,
If we make the best use of our time that we may,
There is much we can do to enliven the way,
Let us only in earnestness each do our best,
Before God and our conscience, and trust for the rest,
Still taking this truth in word and in deed,
That who tries to be happy, is sure to succeed.

Miscellaneous.

Bargaining on Sunday.

A Scotish paper has the following account of the mode by which business may be transacted on Sunday, and no harm done:

Long before there was any word of disruption, and when the Church of Scotland was deemed by those who have since seceded from her communion as the glory of the whole earth, the following conversation ensued between his reverence, now in the Free Church, and one of the hearers in a rural parish on a Sunday forenoon, immediately after divine service:

"Weel, John, there's a fine day."

"It is that, sir," was the reply.

"That's a fine pony you have got, John."

"No cannier or better behaved creatur in the parish, savin yourself," replied Hodge.

"If it had not been Sunday," said the man of Scripture, "I would have enquired the price of it."

"Deed, sir," replied the owner of the beast, "if it hadna been Sunday, as ye say, I would have said aught pounds."

"Indeed," replied John, we will see about that to morrow."

"Very weel, sir. That's a bonny stack o'hay ye had i' the yard—I wouldna be na waur o' a buchle o' it; and it hadna been the day it is I would have speered the price o' it, too."

"I think the more of you for that, John, as it is just the way with myself, for had it not been this hallowed day, I would have said ninepence per stone. I might likewise have asked a number of questions—such as how the market went yesterday in Arbroath, and what are you asking for your Ayrshire bull calf and stirk."

"Deed, ay, sir, but as we cannot be talkin' that wheat raise a shillin', and aits fifteen pence the quarter, on sic a day as this, an' it would be just as ill sayin' that the bit cauffie's worth thirty shillins till anybody."

"Good day John."

"Guid day, sir," was then passed, and thus ended the above equivocal reverence for the Sabbath, although the conversation ended to the mutual worldly satisfaction of both parties.

Scenes at the Police Courts.

Since the Maine Law has been in force in New York city, every day the Police gather in a number of persons found intoxicated in the streets. As regular as the Court opens, the reporter of the New York Tribune is in attendance, to portray the living manners of the wet souls of that great city. The description of the dress and manner of the offenders has had quite a good effect upon some of the fast men, who glory in getting drunk but still hate to be made the laughingstock of half a million. We give a specimen of one of the reports:—Picton Times.

A Queer Fish.

During the proceedings of the morning a queer looking customer attracted the attention of the lookers on. He was a short, stubby man, about thirty years of age, with long brown soap-locks and florid face. He seemed quite impatient, and at short intervals would rise from his seat and then sit down again. He watched the judge closely, seemingly anxious to hear his own name called. After waiting for some time to be gratified in his wish, he addressed the Court. He said:—

"Why in thunderation, Squire, don't you give 'Mericans the fust chance, and not keep 'em waitin' till you've put all them darned Greeks asoak?"

The Court—What's your name, Sir?

Prisoner—Bill Sherman, and nothing shorter; you can bet your bowels on that, Squire.

The Court—Well, Mr. Sherman, your case will be reached in a few minutes. In the mean time keep cool.

Mr. Sherman—Squire, you might as well ask a man to keep cool when he was losin' at a game of old sledge in an air tight oven. After disposing of three or four hard cases the Judge called out the name of William Sherman.

Mr. Sherman stepped forward.

The officer who arrested him stated that he found him endeavouring to pull a canvass awning down from its place in Nassau-st.; on expostulating with him for his conduct, Mr. Sherman swore that it was a shirt which belonged in a birth. Because he had put a private mark on it the week previous; the mark, he said, was a cross where he had killed a bed-bug by hitting it with an anvil; believing Mr. Sherman to be mistaken he brought him in.

The Court—Mr. Sherman, what have you got to say?

Mr. Sherman—I'spect that the least said the better; the soger here who brung me in is a purty decent feller, considerin,' though Hank Spencer, who used to be captain of the Toe-nail Invincibles, has got a coat that takes the shine right out of his'n.

"Where are you from, Mr. Sherman?"

"I was born and raised in Port Bay, but have spent consider'ble time round Cayuga Lake."

"What state I mean?" "Well, Squire, in a state of starvation, or else I shouldn't gone a boatin' in the canal. Squire, was you ever at Port Bay?"

"No, I was not. In what country is it?"

"Well, Squire, I'm cust if you're very well posted. For the accommodation of the poperlation, Port Bay was put down next to Lake Ontario, in the north side of Wayne County, to keep the bullheads from dyin'. By thunder, Squire, you hain't never seen the world till you've see Port Bay; there's more Shermans there than you could shake a stick at in a week. The poperlation lets corn and potatoes grow wild, but the great agricultural product is bullheads. A young gal's education ain't finished till she can skin a live bullhead and fry it inside of three minutes. The poperlation never sees money except when there's a circus or show, and then the bullheads sell in the villages ready skinned at a shillin' a hundred. Water is considered an excellent thing for bullhead women; when the bullhead crop is harvested the poperlation goes to trappin' mush rats; the outlet of the bay is about four feet wide and six inches deep, and the poperlation quarrels like thunder sometimes about who has the best right to put their fykes in it; old Alvah Rood stuck to it once that if he could cut a canal from Port Bay to Crusoe Lake the population could find a market for bullheads in New York.

Where is Crusoe Lake, Mr. Sherman?

"Squire, I ain't a jogerphy teacher, but I dont care if I do enlighten you a little. You see, Squire, one corner of Wayne County was set aside and called Savannah. That corner happens to be a thunderin' big swamp except Crusoe Lake, which is all water. Well there is a numerous poperlation of swamp angels and musketeer's vegetables. Every family that hasn't got a cow keeps a barrel of rot-gut, and it's surprisin' how quick the babies learn to smell out the bung. They wean 'em when they're three months old, and they let 'em suck whisky and warm water. I lived between Port Bay and Crusoe Lake twenty-six years, and then cut stick for the Canal. I've been bowsman on a scow ever since, except in the winter, when scow's ain't allowed to run. Squire, what you goin' to do with me? I did get a little sprung, I work all day yesterday discharging freight from the scow, and I 'spose I must have took too much."

"Will you be careful to keep sober if I let you off this time?"

"Yes, sir'ee, Bob, horsefly—I will."

"Well, Sir, you may go; now be careful."

"Squire—bust my galluses, if you ain't a whole handful of trumps and ten spots—high, low, jack and the game; if you'll go down to the boat I'll treat you to the best the cabin affords, and I'll take care not to let you have enough to get you into such a scrape as I did—if you'll agree not to kiss the cook, for I've got a mortgage on that piece of calico myself."

"I'm afraid I shall not be able to accept your invitation."

"Well, I'll take the will for the deed, so good day."

Mr. Sherman vamoosed.

A Mother's Prayer.

A mother heard of the arrival of her sailor boy out side of the Cape, and was awaiting his return with the anxiety a mother alone can know. With faith strong in God, she prayed for his safety. News came that the vessel was lost.

The father, an unconverted man, who had preserved a sullen silence, now wept aloud. The mother observed, "He is in the hands of Him who doeth all things well," and again the subdued and softened spirit bowed commending her son and husband in an audible voice, to God.

In the morning, the little gate in front of the dwelling turned on its hinges, the door opened and their son, their lost, loved son, stood before them. The vessel had been driven into one of the harbours on the coast, and was safe.

The father rushed to meet him. His mother hanging on his neck, exclaimed,

"My child! how came you here?"

"Mother," said he, as the tears coursed down his sunburnt cheeks, "I knew you'd pray me home."

What a spectacle! a wild, reckless youth acknowledging the efficacy of prayer! It seems he was aware of his perilous situation, and that he labored with the thought, "My mother prays; Christian prayers are answered, and I may be saved." This reflection, when almost exhausted with fatigue, and ready to give up in despair, gave him fresh strength and with renewed courage he labored [illegible] and was saved."

Home Politeness.

Why not be polite! How much does it cost to say, 'I thank you.' Why not practice it at home? Do you hear husband 'you [illegible] your dinner to-day?' How sweet it is to see some little act of courtesy, how sweet the smiling acknowledgment. If your husband—oh! it's a matter of course? No need of thanks.

Why not be polite at home? Why not use freely the golden coin of courtesy? How sweet they sound, those little words, 'I thank you,' or 'you are very kind.' Doubly, yes, thrice sweet from the lips we love, when heart smiles make the eye sparkle with the clear light of affection.

Be polite to your children. Do you expect them to be mindful of your welfare? To grow glad at your approach? To hasten away to do your pleasure before your request is half spoken? Then, with all your dignity and authority mingle politeness. Give it a niche in your household temple. Only then will you have the true secret of sending out into the world really finished gentlemen and ladies.

Again we say unto all—be polite.

How to be Happier.

Said a venerable farmer, some 80 years of age, to a relative who lately visited him: I have lived on this farm for over half a century. I have no desire to change my residence as long I live on earth. I have no desire to be any richer than I now am. I have worshipped the God of my fathers with the same people for more than forty years. During that period I have rarely been absent from the sanctuary on the Sabbath, and have never lost but one communion season. I have never been confined to my bed by sickness a single day. The blessings of God have been richly spread around me, and I made up my mind long ago that if I wished to be any happier I must have more religion."

A Veteran Preacher.

Rev. John Sawyer, of Garland, Me., who is now within a few months of one hundred years of age, was in Boston last week, and led the devotional services at the Malboro Hotel, with much fitness and devotional spirit. He was on his way to revisit the scenes of his childhood, in Hebron, Connecticut, from whence he removed some eighty-eight years ago. "Father Sawyer" as he is called, is a graduate of Dartmouth College of the class of 1783, and has been in the ministy as pastor and missionary nearly seventy years.

Bathing.

One of the greatest preventions of disease, especially during the warm season, in connection with strict temperance in dietetics and open air exercise, is, a clean exterior, a frequent and judicious use of the bath.—Thousands have died prematurely, with cholera and other diseases, who might now have been alive, enjoying comfortable health, had they strictly observed the laws of their being.

☞ Teach a child there is harm in everything, however innocent, and so soon as it discovers the cheat it won't see sin in anything. That's the reason deacon's sons seldom turn out well, and preachers' daughters are married through a window. Innocence is the sweetest thing in the world, and there is more of it than folks generally imagine. If you want some to transplant, don't seek it in enclosures of cant—for it has only counterfeit ones—but go to the gardens of truth and sense. Coerced innocence is like an imprisoned lark—open the door and it's off forever. The bird that roams through the sky and the groves unrestrained, knows how to dodge the hawk and protect itself; but the caged one, the moment it leaves its bars and bolts behind, is pounced upon by the fowler or the vulture.

How to Prosper in Business.

In the first place, make up your mind to accomplish whatever you undertake; decide upon some particular employment, and persevere in it. All difficulties are overcome by diligence and assiduity. Be not afraid to work with your own hands, and diligently too. "A cat in gloves catches no mice." Attend to your own business, and never trust it to another. "A pot that belongs to many is ill stirred and worse boiled." Be frugal. "That which will not make a pot will make a pot lid." Be abstemious. "Who dainties love shall beggars prove." Rise early. "The sleeping fox catches no poultry." Treat every one with respect and civility. "Everything is gained and nothing lost by courtesy." Good manners insure success. Never anticipate wealth from any other source than labor. "He who waits for dead men's shoes may have to go for a long time barefooted." And, above all things, "Nil desperandum," for "Heaven helps those that help themselves." If you implicitly follow these precepts, nothing can hinder you from accumulating.—[Hunt's (New York) Merchants' Magazine.

Interesting Geographal Facts.

A correspondent of the National Intelligencer suggests the following interesting facts, digested from the census returns, for the consideration of the readers of that paper:

A traveller who should set out at the Texan frontier, or any where else on the south-western side of the national domain, and journey towards the North and East, would meet on his road the following facts, one after another, in as regular succession as the steps of a ladder:

1. Farms regularly diminish in size and increase in numbers as we proceed from South to North and East.

2. The proportion of improved land steadily increases, and that of unimproved land steadily diminishes, irrespective of the density of population, as we proceed from South to North and East.

3. The cash value of farms, both in the aggregate and the price per acre, regularly increases as we proceed from South to North and East.

4. The production of corn and wheat regularly and steadily increases, without an exception, as we proceed from South to North and East.

5. The productive industry of the people, both in the aggregate and as individuals, regularly increases as we proceed from South to North and East.

6. The density of population regularly increases as we proceed from South to North and East.

7. The rate of increase of population regularly increases as we proceed from South to North and East.

☞ The population of the globe is estimated at 900,000,000. It is also estimated that a number equal to the entire population of the globe, existing at any one time, passes away three times in every century. As the present population of the earth has increased from a single pair, created about sixty centuries ago, one-half of the present population might be taken as a fair estimate of the average number who have died during each of the one hundred and eighty periods, or thirds of centuries, during which the earth may have been inhabited; which would give 8,100,000,000 for the whole number who have lived on the earth.

The Loss of the Soul.

The loss of the soul duly realized, would make us anxious to save others, as well as ourselves. We are journeying with fellow-travellers to eternity. We should speak to them of the way and the end, and strive, by our prayers, our counsels, and our kind efforts, to turn their feet from the broad road to destruction, into the path of life and heaven.

The Blacks as a Race.

The New York Times, in an article on the Jamaica Emancipation, says:—'The records of the Alms-house last winter showed that the blacks could take care of themselves, while the soup-houses, station houses, and alms-houses, were besieged with indignent and helpless whites—American, German, Irish and Italian. Many individuals have amassed considerable wealth, and secured the respect of white neighbors, by their honesty and correctness of dealing. They aspire not unsuccessfully to the professions; there are respectable doctors of law, physic and divinity amongst them.'

To Destroy Canada Thistles.

Mr. J. L. McD., of Chemung, New York, gives directions to the Rural New Yorker to destroy Canada thistles. He says:—

"It is known to many farmers that ploughing will destroy Canada thistles, though there is some difference in the mode of operation. Most generally the ground is ploughed four or five times during the summer, which will nearly or quite exterminate them, but my treatment of these customers I think better still.

Five years ago I purchased a farm on which were a number of patches of Canada thistles. On one field of six acres they were from two to four feet high, and so thick that neither grass nor anything else could grow with them. About the first of June I harrowed down the thistles and ploughed them under, and the first week in July ploughed the field again and sowed buck-wheat; harvested a good crop and some thistles; thrashed the buckwheat on the lot, and burnt the straw and chaff. I treated this field in like manner for three years in succession, seeding down with clover and timothy the last year, and have completely eradicated the thistles. By sowing the buckwheat, the farmer will not only be remunerated for his labour, but there is no kind of crop so good as this to free land from daisies, and other noxious weeds. To subdue patches growing in corners of fences and along highways, mow them off in the old of the moon, (Dutch rule) in July and August. I have tried this rule and have exterminated many patches in this way.

How to Prevent the Turnip Fly.

A correspondent informs us that two ounces of sulphur, commonly called flower of brimstone, mixed with a pound of turnip seed, will effectually prevent the fly from destroying the crop. This preventive is extremely cheap, the cost not exceeding 2d. per acre. In mixing, employ a little rape oil, which will cause the sulphur to adhere to the seed; but care should be taken not to use too much oil, as that would prevent the seed from passing though the drill

How to Produce Large Fruit.

A correspondent of the Gardener's Gazette says, that by a very simple and easy process, fruits of all kinds may be raised one-third larger than is usually the case, and of greatly improved quality. The secret consists in supporting the fruits, so that they shall not be allowed to hang their whole weight upon the stalk, or to twist about in the wind. The Gazette states that when the fruit is allowed to hang naturally upon the stalk, the increasing weight strains the stem, or twig, and thus lessens the quantity of nutritious food flowing to the fruit. The fruit may be supported either by tying it to a branch with a piece of matting, or by enclosing it in a small net. Flowers, such as dahlias or peonies, may also be rendered much larger by the adoption of this system.

Canada in the Paris Exposition.

"Bertie," the Paris correspondent of the N. Y. Herald, speaks in high terms of eulogium of the appearance made by Canada in the World's Exhibition at Paris. In his letter of August 1st, he says:—

The annexe has by far the most life about it, and by its skilful arrangement and classification, its practical character, its interesting objects ranging through the whole field of texaul, mineral and mechanical labor, is the most wonderful museum ever witnessed. Among all the countries whose productions attract attention in this building, none stand so prominent as Canada; and one is tempted to regret that the United States, should in a department so peculiarly its own as is that of Canada, be so completely in the shade. The Canadian Court occupies some 8,000 square feet of space, and is partly included between two sets of virtues, placed handsomely to the logitudinal axis of the annexe. By the admirable taste and ingenuity of the curator, Mr. Perry, a trophy—a sort of tower, reaching to the roof, composed of different sorts of wood—is erected, which completely fixes the visitor's eye. It lies within a winding staircase, which enables him not only to inspect each specimen minutely in detail, but to gratify his curiosity with a superb coup d' œil of the whole length of the annexe, more than a mile long. The wood consists of sixty-five varieties, twenty seven of which are of commercial value.

The display of cereals is good, with only this defect—that an exhibition of grain in the straw has been omitted; but the specimens are without a rival, if we except those exhibited in the English department. One exhibitor, Mr. Sheppard, we think, of Montreal, sends, also, one hundred varieties of garden and flower seeds. Since Professor Owen's remarks, in 1851, concerning certain facilities in the manufacture of isinglass, some most successful efforts have been made in Canada, judging by the specimens exhibited. Of the oils, there are seal, porpoise and cod, and other celebrated for their medicinal qualities.

Raw materials were expected, but Canada has taken France by surprise in some of her manufactures. Here are heavy edge tools superior to such as can be produced in Europe, and which I presume the United States alone could rival. France certainly has nothing to compare with them. Mr. Dale, of Galt, and Mr. R. Scott, of Montreal, seems to exhibit the best specimens in the way of tools. The carriages shown, which remind us of the American specimens, are models of that species of light construction. Prince Napoleon has already purchased one of the two exhibited, made by Mr. Leduc, of Montreal. The harness and saddles, although dear as, compared with those of Austria, are very good. The furniture, too in Black Walnut, is much admired for the brilliancy of polish the wood admits. Mr. George Perry, of Montreal, the constructor of the fire engine that gained the first prize at the Exhibition in London is again a competitor. In this [illegible] the competition is great, and the first [illegible] will not be won without a tussle.

There is also a model of [illegible] Victoria bridge in the tubes of [illegible] trains are to cross the St. Lawrence [illegible] treal, a distance of two miles; also [illegible] of the St. Lawrence canals. There [illegible] Indian curiosities, too, India rubber [illegible] and sewing machines, portable furnaces, &c., &c., great Lay Canada biscuits, pickles, bears hams, &c. The last day of Mr. Logan has furnished from the Province some capital specimens of minerals. This gentleman, who is official geologist as well as commissioner to Paris, has exerted himself unremittingly to set Canada off, to the best advantage, and assisted by Mr. Perry, has certainly been most successful. Complaints are made that the other paid commissioner is much more intent on his individual pursuits than the interests of his Province.

Provintcal and State Fairs.

The annual Agricultural shows will this year be held in the following order:—Canada west, at Cobourg, October 10, 11 and 12; Canada East, at Sherbrooke, September 12, 13 and 14; New York State Fair, at Albany, first week of October; Michigan, at Detroit, and Tennessee, at Nashville, same time; Georgia, at Atlanta, September 10 and 13; Vermont, at Rutland, September 12 13 and 14; New Hampshire and the Philadelphia Show, at the same time. Ohio fair, at Columbus, on the 18th September; New Jersey at Camden, September 19th. The fairs in Kentucky and Pennsylvania commence on the 25th September; Western Virginia, at Wheeling Island, September 26th; Connecticut, at Hartford, October, 9, 10, 11, and 12th; Illinois, at Chicago, same days. Alabama, at Montgomery, commences October 23; East Tennessee, London, same day; Maryland, Baltimore, in the last week of October; Virginia, at Richmond, October 30th 31st, 1st and 2nd November.—Old Countryman.

Awful Murder.

A most awful murder was committed in North Sterling, about nine miles West of Oswego, August 30th. A man named Fitzgerald, together with his wife, were found horribly cut to pieces and dead in bed this forenoon. A young son in the same room, not killed but since dead. A son named John is suspected, as he tells contradictory stories. He was recently arrested for stealing horses, and has threatened to kill his father, and yesterday had a quarrel with his mother. He was arrested to-day, and says the murder was committed by a negro. Another son in another part of the house heard nothing until the screaming of the boy; he then gave the alarm, and found all the doors locked on the inside, and found John in the room with the murdered persons, also blood on him. He slept on the floor in a room opening into the room where the murder was committed.

Manumission of Nine Slaves.

F. W. Harris, Esq., of Mississippi, appeared before Judge Parker yesterday morning, on behalf of Nathaniel Hoggatt, of Adams, county, Mississippi, and manumitted the following slaves:

Nelly, aged twenty-one years, her two children, aged one two years and the other four months; Mary, aged seventeen years; Anthony, aged twenty-four years; Absalom aged twenty-one years; William, aged twenty-six years; James, aged twenty two years; and Emily, aged sixteen years. They are all light mulattoes. They were the property of Wilfred Hoggat, who at his death gave them their freedom in his will, but from unforseen circumstances, the will was not carried into effect until his son Nathaniel arrived at legal age, when he came to this city with the slaves, and caused their liberation as has been stated above.—Cin. Com. 8th inst.

Sir C. P. Roney and the Postage.

If the following paragraph from a Liverpool paper may be relied on as correct, Sir C. P. Roney has not been labouring in vain. If he interfered in the affair merely for the purpose of making "a little political capital," as some Canadian papers alleged, it has been to the benefit of the whole of the British Colonies, and to that of Canada in particular:—

Our Colonial readers will rejoice to learn, by this day's mail for America, that for the reasons set forth by Mr Wilson, Secretary of the Treasury, in Tuesday's debate, the newspaper colonial postal rights and privileges contended for by Sir Cusack Roney in his recent correspondence with the Secretary to the General Post Office, and so unwisely resisted by that functionary, have been conceded, or rather restored. To-day and henceforth the colonists will receive the journals of the mother country at the postage rates they have been accustomed to. Had it not been for the remonstrance with the Post Office, and the publicity which that remonstrance obtained, the colonists would have been most arbitrarily subjected to an impost, amounting to a virtual prohibition of English newspapers amongst them. They will know how to appreciate this timely and judicious defence made in their behalf, and the redress so promptly secured to them. The right man has certainly been in the right place on this occasion; but as certainly that man has not been Mr. Rowland Hill, nor has the place been St. Martin le-Grand.—Liverpool Journal.

Who is my Neighbor?

Thy neighbor? It is he whom thou
Hast power to aid and bless,
Whose aching heart or burning brow
Thy soothing hand may press.

Thy neighbor? 'Tis the fainting poor,
Whose eye with want is dim;
Whom hunger sends from door to door:
Go thou, and succour him.

Thy neighbor? 'Tis the heart bereft
Of every earthly gem—
Widow and orphan helpless left:
Go thou, and shelter them.

Thy neighbor? Yonder toiling slave,
Fetter'd in thought and limb:
Whose hopes are all beyond the grave:
Go thou, and ransom him.

Whene'er thou meet'st a human form
Less favour'd than thine own,
Remember 'tis thy fellow worm,
Thy brother or thy son.

Senator Sumner to Passmore Williamson.

Lake Superior, on board the North Star,
Saturday, Aug. 11, 1855.

My Dear Sir:—With astonishment and indignation I have learned the story of your imprisonment; and now, from this distant retreat, where I am for the moment, I make haste to send you my sympathy.

From beginning to end—from side to side, and in every aspect—this transaction can be regarded only as a clear, indubitable and utterly unmitigated outrage. The new-fang'ed doctrine, that a slave master can reclaim upon his alleged slave—of course with all the revolting incidents of slavery—into the Free States, is not more odious than it is preposterous. It is scouted by reason, and disowned by universal jurisprudence. You were right in disregarding it. In stepping forward to remind persons, claimed as slaves on this pretext, that all such claim is baseless, you did a good work. It was this knowledge that filled them with confidence to re-gain their God-given liberty. And for this it appears that you have been brought before a man, who, 'dressed in a little brief authority,' has cast you into prison. This outrage is rendered more outrageous by the way in which it was done.

It was perpetrated through the perversion of the great writ of habeas corpus. This writ of freedom and deliverance, which in England has often been styled the palladium of the Constitution—which is recognized as a distinctive feature of Constitutional Government—which finds no place in a despotism, and which is the very master-key appointed to unlock prison doors and let the oppressed go free—has been made in your case, by a hocus-pocus without precedent, the instrument of imprisonment and oppression.

Strange and disgraceful as all this is, it must be considered as the natural fruit of Slavery. Any person, whosoever he may be—whether simple citizens or magistrate—who undertakes to uphold this wrong, seems forthwith to lose his reason. He may be just, humane and decent in other things, but in the support of Slavery he becomes unjust, inhuman and indecent—often in obvious unconsciousness of his degradation. The blindness which makes him insensible to a wrong so transcendent, naturally makes him insensible to the lesser wrong by it which it is maintained. What is the writ habeas corpus, the trial by jury, the privilege of debate, or your liberty or mine, in the estimation of a person who has already screwed himself to the pitch of injustice necessary for the vindication of an institution which separates parent and child—which stamps woman as a concubine—which shuts the gate of knowledge, and which snatches from the weak all the hard-earned fruit of incessant toil?

But there must be an end to these things; and as Shakespeare found a jewel in the toad's head, so do I find a cheering omen even in the injustice which has made you its victim. There is an old saying handed down from distant antiquity, that 'Whose the gods wish to destroy, they first make mad;' and I have often of late been impressed by its truth. The Slave Oligarchy is mad, and their overflowing madness runs through every agent and tool. In all that they do—especially in the Fugitive Slave bill and its cruel enforcement, the Nebraska bill and its felonious administration, and now in the imprisonment of an unoffending citizen—I rejoice to believe that there is unmistakable evidence of that madness which precedes a fall. Verily the day is at hand when returning justice will once more bear sway; then among the triumphs of Freedom, will be a reckoning with unjust judges.

Meanwhile accept my congratulations on the portion of responsibility and dignity which is yours. It is a privilege to suffer for truth; and I envy not the meanness of that soul which would hesitate to prefer your place within the stone walls of a prison to the cushioned bench of the magistrate by whose irrational and tyrannical edict you have been condemned.

Believe me, my dear sir, with much regard,
Very faithfully yours,
Charles Sumner.

MEETING AT NORRISTOWN.

A meeting of the friends of freedom, called to take into consideration the present aspects of the question of slavery, was held at Norristown on Saturday, September 1st.

Rev. James M. Wilson, of Philadelphia, was called to the Chair, and Robert Purves, James Mott, Sarah Pugh, of Philadelphia, Mr. Cheyney, of Norristown, Thomas Garret and Isaac S. Flint, of Delaware, and the Rev. A. T. Foss, of N. H., appointed Vice-Presidents. Clinton Gillingham and Abby Kimber were appointed Secretaries.

The meeting was opened with a prayer by the President.

The business committee, consisting of E. M. Davis, Dr. G. Thomas, R. Tomlinson, Sarah Pugh, Mahlon B. Linton, Samuel Aaron, Thomas Curtis, and Rebecca Plumly reported the following, among other resolutions, which were unanimously and enthusiastically adopted:—

Resolved,—That simply to pronounce American slavery a moral evil, would be to use terms of but feeble significance, that the system would be inadequately characterized as a scheme of unmixed and immitigable villany, admitting of no palliation and susceptible of no apology, and that it is stopping short of the whole truth, to say that the system, in its entire growth, root and branch, bud, blossom and fruit, is evil—only evil, and that continually.

Resolved—That the conduct of Judge Kane in assuming powers not within the limit of his prerogative, in prostituting the writ of habens corpus to the uses of slavery, in hearing evidence and arguments upon a charge of perjury, and then stealthily sinking that charge that he might despoil the respondent of the right of trial by jury, and on the pretext of a contempt of court, commit him to an indefinite and arbitrary imprisonment, in ignorantly or mendaciously denying the existence of Pennsylvania law securing freedom to the slave voluntarily brought into the state by his master, and in questioning their validity, if in existence, has shown a despotic temper, rendering him totally unfit for the meanest judicial position, entitling him to the scorn and indignation of all friends of freedom, and rescuing his name from oblivion, that it may live an immortality of infamy.

Resolved,—That those who have believed that Jane Johnson was forcibly abducted, because they themselves are too ignoble to feel the impulses of that spirit which made her pant for freedom, must be convinced by her courageous appearance in open court, before her claimant and the jackalls in his train, to testify that she willingly and gladly accepted the boon so unexpectedly offered her: that Passmore Williamson, instead of wresting a slave from the possession of her master, was rescuing a kidnapped woman from the clutches of a man thief.

Resolved,—That in the conduct of Judge Kane, in the imprisonment of Passmore Williamson we see the base action of a willing instrument of a pro-slavery government—a government determined to sacrifice all the rights of the separate States, and all the rights of the individual citizen, just so far as they stand in the way of the paramount supremacy of the slave power and the slave law over the whole land.

Resolved—That from the decision of Judge Kane, contrary to the principles of the common law, contrary to every dictate of justice and humanity, in direct conflict with a statute of the United States and the jurisdiction of the State of Pennsylvania, there is but one effect in appeal, and that we make, to the people themselves.

Resolved,—That we commend to our friends everywhere, to set themselves diligently to work to secure a petition to the ensuing Congress, which every man and woman of the State shall be asked to sign, that that body shall impeach John K. Kane for a high crime against the liberties of the people, and demand his removal from an office, the high duties of which he is incapable of appreciating, and whose power he has prostituted to the worst of tyrannies, and that a Committee of three from Philadelphia, be appointed to prepare such a petition, and have it circulated.

Resolved—That the pusillanimity or indifference exhibited by the press of Philadelphia, with a few exceptions, among which the Daily Sun occupies an enviable, and the base Pennsylvanian a disgraceful and infamous prominence, gives evidence of a shocking insensibility to the claims of humanity, of an unpardonable blindness to the dangers threatening our liberties and of a servility to the behests of slavery, that should make every Philadelphian blush for the reputation of his city.

Resolved—That this Convention tenders to Passmore Williamson its strongest sympathy in the unjust persecution and arbitrary imprisonment to which he is now subjected by the despotic and illegal sentence of an unscrupulous Judge of a federal court; and at the same time that it avows its warm admiration and hearty approval of the firmness and dignity with which he has sustained and still sustains the noble position in which he stands, its members pledge him their devoted efforts individually and collectively, to regenerate that public opinion to which we must look in the last resort for that obedience to God which is the destruction to tyrants.

Resolved—That we assure James Martin, Isaac Curtis, Wm. Ballach, Isaiah Moore, and especially our esteemed friend and highly valued coadjutor, Wm. Still, of our sincere sympathy in the trial to which they are now subjected, and most heartily wish them a safe deliverance therefrom; and whatever may be the result, we are confident that the noble spirit of liberty and justice which prompted the gallant act, which is made a charge of guilt against them, will be in no degree daunted or disheartened, but that in any emergency they will be equally ready to throw themselves between any slaveholding miscreant and the victim whom he may attempt to reduce again to the terrible condition of an American slave.

In the morning session the Convention was ably and eloquently addressed by Mr. Foss, of New Hampshire. His objections to slavery were not to its incidents and concomitants, but to the system itself; not to its extension to free Territories and States, but its existence anywhere. He recognised no authority, political, social or religious, which would command him to enslave or re-inslave a fellow-creature.

Mr. Curtis, of Philadelphia, alluded to the effect which the system has upon the religion of the country, not merely altering the interpretations put upon the Bible, but virtually changing the text thereof. He showed a copy of the Bible prepared for the Southern market, illustrated by a copy of Ary Scheffer's beautiful and touching picture of Christ the Consoler. In the original the sick, the the mad, the halt and blind and deaf are in the presence of the Saviour, and are freed of their burdens. The slave lifts up his manacled hands and the chains drop off. Beneath are the words, "Come to me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." In the copy made for Southern consumption, the slave is omitted. Thus are painting and Scripture garbled to pander to the peculiar institution.

The Rev. Mr. Milligan denounced slavery as a violation of every commandment of the decalogue, and thought there was no necessity of drawing a distinction between the Old and New Testament, in their teachings upon this subject. Man stealing is denounced in the strongest terms in the former. "Love thy neighbor as thyself," is as destructive to slavery as the golden rule itself.

In the afternoon session, Mr. McKim reviewed in the most cogent and eloquent manner the conduct of Judge Kane, in the Williamson case. In the course of his speech he remarked that Jane Johnson was now in the audience, a statement which produced great sensation. The audience demanded her appearance upon the platform, when she came forward amid tremendous applause, and took her place quite overcome by the warmth of her reception. Mr. McKim asserted what has been so often proved, that Passmore Williamson never had custody of Mrs. Johnson. He said, moreover, that at no time was it in his power to compel her appearance in court, as she was in the hands of those who would never have consented to imperil her liberty by putting her within the power of Judge Kane and Marshall Wynkoop.

Mr. Purvis objected to the distinction which Mr. McKim had made between the man Kane and the Judge, and believed that any man that was so conscienceless in public relations, could not be reliable in private life. He would have the community put a mark upon him, as upon the first murderer, and make him a vagabond and an outcast upon the earth.

Speeches were made by the Rev. Mr. Wilson, Mr. Gauss, Mr. Aaron, and others.

Runaway Slaves.

Yesterday a couple of negro men belonging to John Best, in Montgomery county, opposite Herman, were arrested near Venice, in Illinois, by a man named Randolph. According to their story, an Irishman gave them free passes for five dollars, and set them across the river at Hermann, in a skiff, from whence they came to this city on the Pacific Railroad. They got ferried across the river at this point in a skiff, by a couple of boys, to whom they gave twenty-five cents each. They were brought to this city and lodged in jail to await reclamation by their owner.—St. Louis Democrat.

ADDRESS

To the Colored People of Canada.

Brethren and Sisters:

We, the undersigned members of a Committee appointed at the Convention of colored people, held at and near the Dawn Institute, C. W., on Wednesday, August 29th, 1855, to take ways and means to secure again to us (the colored people) possession of the Dawn Institution, in the manner and for the purpose designed by the original Donors and Managers, having deemed it necessary as a preliminary step, to secure a sum of money for the purpose of prosecuting the claim of the people through their Trustees, before the Tribunals of the country, feel impelled to send to you an Agent or Agents, as the case may require, to receive at your hands such sum or sums, whether large or small, as you may in your judgment be disposed to give into the general fund for that purpose. We therefore, commission Miss Mary A. Shadd, an Agent, to present to you a statement of the case, and to receive from you the means required. The duties of the mission will be attended to by her in the intervals arising from her business as an Agent for the Provincial Freeman.

This lady has our entire confidence in this mission, and as it is for the furtherance of your interests, we trust she may have yours; and, your Committee sincerely hope, that out of your abundance, you will give liberally, and so help to bring to a happy conclusion this very important movement for the restoration of our rights.

James C. Brown, Chairman.
Henry J. Young, Secretary.
Chatham, Aug. 29, 1855.

☞ An attempt is being made to get up another Meeting about the Dawn, and so nullify the people's gathering, held on the 29th of August. We shall see.

HUMBUG.

We cut the following from the Planet of this town, and right heartily do we agree in the main with the views expressed by that journal, respecting Mr. Garrett's plan for freeing the enslaved of the United States.

We condemn (and we believe the colored people generally do) every scheme of emancipation, which admits the right of property in man. Our firm conviction is, that any man or government that recognizes for a moment, such a principle, is an enemy to Universal Freedom. We hope our friends in this country, the United States, and also, Europe, (for, we learn our friend Garrett thinks of visiting the "old world," to lay his magnanimous humbug before them,) will not countenance friend Garrett in his efforts, but rather seek to convert the good brother from the error of his way.

The scheme is but the Political Pony of that arch enemy of the colored people, Henry Clay, and we assure our friend, if he expects to ride him to, and through Europe, that the beast must become lean and exhausted, and will fall and crush him, and to this end—friends, refuse him the needed provender.

Abolition of Slavery in the United States.

A meeting of colored persons was held on Monday last, in the City Hall at Detroit, at which a scheme was introduced by the Rev. H. Garrett, of London, C. W., and debated upon at considerable length, "showing how money can be raised to purchase the liberty of the slaves in the Southern States." Several resolutions were also passed in favor of the movement, calling upon the people to embrace the views put forth by the speaker of the evening. We subjoin them:

Resolved—That we highly approve and cheerfully concur in the views of our brother, Henry Garrett, of London, C. W., and bid him God speed in his great undertaking of convincing the American people that the money can be raised to purchase the liberty of the slaves in the United States.

Resolved—That we firmly believe, that if every man and woman would tax himself and herself one dollar per year, for the purpose of buying slaves and setting them at liberty, it would at least liberate the slaves in three States of the Union, every year.

Resolved—That we believe the general government has the same right to purchase the slaves in Virginia, Maryland and Alabama, as she has to purchase the slaves found among the Seminole Indians in the Florida war.

Resolved—That we sincerely believe in all candor, that if there was less rum drank and tobacco used in the country, and the people would live more economically in their domestic capacity, the money could soon be raised to buy every slave in the United States.

W. C. Munroe, Chairman,
J. Lightfoot, Secretary.

A pamphlet was recently issued at Richmond, Va., in which it is stated that 61,624 slaves have escaped from the different Southern States since 1815, each of whom were placed at an average value of $450, which makes in round numbers $27,730,800. This, all will say, is a large sum of money. It is nothing, however, to the amount which it is proposed to raise by the above scheme.

Mr. Garrett proposes to raise a sum sufficient to purchase the freedom of all the slaves in the Southern States. Now, those, by the last census, number upwards of 3,000,000. These Mr. Garrett proposes to buy; to raise the money by private subscription; and of course to pay the slaveholders the full price of their slaves. The thing is impossible. The 3,000,000 of slaves would be held at about $1,350,000,000. Look at that and tell us if it can be done. It is nearly as feasible as the attempt to bail the the Ocean dry. We admit that enough money can be raised to buy freedom for a few—and a few they will be that are bought by this means—but the attempt to banish slavery from the South in this way, is absurd. The second resolution says "that if every man and woman would tax himself and herself one dollar per year, three States could be liberated every twelve months." We do not doubt this. But will they? No. Everybody cannot be made to feel an interest in the cause that almost solely effects others not themselves. The third resolution is more to the point, and is right and just—is a strong argument. If the general government had power to purchase the slaves owned by the Seminoles, it has an equal right to purchase those held by Virginians and South Carolinians. No, Rev. Mr. Garrett, your scheme, though a generous one, is not capable of being carried out to the extent you propose. Time will convince you of this. Voluntary Subscriptions for this purpose, though it is one that most should command munificent donations, will never amount to enough to purchase the slaves in Kentucky alone. The "Underground Railway," each year, will bring away more than all the sums which you will ever purchase; and to carry out the design in a small way, we question if it will not increase slavery rather than diminish it. It will but meet one great end which the slaveholder wishes; it will make the market in which he disposes of his slaves better, and give him a great price, thereby enriching him, and enabling him to deal in the traffic more extensively. Other means will have to be adopted—the Government will be obliged to take the matter in hand before the abolishment of slavery takes place. Private contribution will do it never, never.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

S. J. Holley, Esq., of Oswego, is now forming a line of new vessels, to be called the "Ebony line" One of his new vessels has just made her appearance. She is called the Gerrit Smith And her will be out soon, which will be called the Theodore Parker. This will be followed by the Henry Ward Beecher. The Fred. Douglass and one or two others crafts, with equally appropriate titles, will be out next year.—Boston Courier.

The above is indicative of the deep hypocrisy and hard-hearted wickedness of the vessels owners among the republican slaves of the neighboring country.

An "Ebony line" of new vessels! Are such vessels for the especial accommodation of the blacks? If so—who don't see the hypocrisy? Yes, the basest hypocrisy? for any people holding the national sentiments of the United States, and then make such distinction, as would seem to be implied in the name "Ebony line," can but be hypocrites of the deepest dye.

We judge this "Ebony-line" is not the one that certain men stealers, of the United States, wished the general government to establish between their country and Africa, to enable them the better to gratify their infernal disposition, in murdering the free blacks, in shipping them to Liberia, and in robbing the enslaved of such rights, as the oppressed should die in defence of, for if it was then the names of the inimitable Garret Smith, Parker, and Beecher, much less that of Fred. Douglass, who the government dreads more than all the armies" of Europe, would not have been given to the vessels of the line, for they rather that such names should rot, than to be perpetuated.

But notwithstanding the significance of the names of these vessels, we will stake our reputation, that at least so much will be true in the arrangement of the "Ebony-line," that every Ebony passenger will not be able to obtain a state-room for himself, or family, until every pale face and Indian shall have been served; and that if the Ebony-folks are allowed to look at the inside of the cabins of such vessels, and behold at all the dinner tables, that they will not be allowed to enter such and take their meals, till the white folk and Indians are done, and will grant them, their scraps of broken meat and sucked bones. Mark, this will be as true of Fred. Douglass, Dr. McCune Smith and their Ebony superiors, as it will of the humblest black, in the United States. And it will be even so, should all the whites and Indian passengers be felons, in irons, and on their way from the County prison, to the State Penitentiary. Such being the conduct of the vessels' owners universally, in the United States,—who dare deny the truthfulness of our charge?—that they are a base set of hypocrites!

NEGRO CHURCHES.

The St. Louis Intelligencer attacks the African churches as the source of nearly all the mischief concocted by the slaves, and states that in several instances lately, the escape of slaves has been traced directly to the agency of churches, and proposes to remedy the evil by breaking up the negro churches, and providing sufficient accommodations for the slaves in the white churches.

The foregoing is worthy of note, truly. It indicates the nature of the slaveholder's religion. It condemns the church that promotes freedom. We hesitate not in saying, that that is no Christian Church that does not diligently use all the means in its power, to secure the freedom of both soul and body of every son and daughter of Adam. If so much is true, it seems that "the African churches" are the only Christian's churches of the South, for they are condemned by the other, so-called, churches, for doing that very thing. They are helping slaves to escape. The so-called churches, proposes to destroy the true church of Christ, at the South! We predict the doom of the Southern country, when they shall have accomplished this heaven-daring iniquity. "Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad"—and may God do so, with such demons on earth! We have no objection to the union of white and black churches, or to the non-existence of African churches, as such; but such an union, as the Southern Pirates propose, may heaven forbid!

But the "slaves" are to be accommodated "in the white churches"—only but think of it—"the white churches"—can you conceive of such a thing among a set of monsters—much worse than highway men?

We would ask these southern hypocrites if they really intend to treat the slaves as human, much less, as Christians, brothers, and sisters, in their churches? Do you intend to allow them to sit beside you in the midst of the meeting house? or are they to be put into "the negro pew," behind the door, or to one side of the gallery? Are they to take the emblems of our Saviour's broken Body and Shed Blood, in common with you, or wait until you have been served, and then they receive your leavings? If so, do you think that Christ will accept of your deeds, as Christian acts? We beg you to ponder!

Correspondence.

Commencing Early.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman.

Mr. Editor:—You were pleased, in No. 18, of the Freeman, to allude to the castigation received by our paper, at the hands of the Kent Advertiser, and to assure your strange "friend," that as the party responsible for the offensive article in No. 17, I would answer for myself—that I should have done last week. It would have pleased me better, in view of my many duties, had your very able and telling rejoinder been thought all-sufficient by you, as I am sure the impartial readers of both sides must do; but as you have said otherwise, allow me to say, that without the least hope of making the Advertiser "tremble," the entire position assumed towards the Freeman by that paper, the charges made, &c., were without excuse, so far as the offensive article in the Freeman was concerned.

The fact is, there was so much truth in the remarks made in this paper, that the Advertiser has endeavoured in vain to contradict it, although dodging in and out, over the length of more than a column. Why did not the Advertiser publish what the Louisville Courier, New York Tribune, and Freeman said, if actuated by right principles in its reply. It could have been done, and in better order, with less waste of type, and more effect, than in its bungling, cart-before-horse-like fashion. But no, that would not have answered its purpose. The Freeman was coming to Chatham, and that was the time to shake the confidence of its Chatham friends. Suppose the Advertiser did say thus and so about the member for Kent, who does not know that it did not cost him much, seeing the Advertiser is patronized pretty well by colored people The whole tenor of the article against this paper was more like an effort to build itself up in the estimation of colored men, than to subserve the ends of truth and right. The Advertiser says:—

"We deny that we have in any way defended slave-holders, in the sense which this journal would have its readers believe. If this journal intends to convey the idea that we have ever favored the cursed system of slavery, in any way, we can only say that the charge is false, and incapable of proof."

So that it will be seen that it had no clear conception of what the Freeman did mean, and from the character of its attack, I doubt very much if its own meaning was plain to it. If the Advertiser had not the brains to get at the meaning of this paper, whose fault is that? One thing is certain, the colored people had good grounds for their movements, although they should have proceeded otherwise, and whether the Advertiser could or not, they understood the Freeman. The Advertiser says, "that the statement in the Courier was a tissue of falsehood from beginning to end, and if this journal got its information from Mr. Shawhan, he must have been aware that what he stated was false." It does not follow, that because Mr. Shawhan did not tell the Advertiser that he came to take his slaves back, that the statement made by the Courier on that point was not true, and if so certain that that was false, how could he be sure that what Shawhan told here was true? If Shawhan's young men did not express a desire in their letter to return to slavery nor otherwise that is a question of veracity between the slaveholder and the Advertiser, not the Advertiser and Freeman, as the Courier is authority. Again, the attempt to represent the Freeman as the friend of mob violence, by saying:—

"Our laws are sufficiently comprehensive to protect all men, no matter to what class or color they may belong, and we are sure that those whose duty it is to administer the laws in our town, are just as ready to protect the colored man's rights as they are any other class in the community. This being the case, we repeat what we stated before, that when just reason exists on the part of the colored inhabitants to suppose that any of their countrymen are in danger of being dragged away by the machinations of slave-holders, they must not take the law in their own hands, but seek protection from the proper authorities. This is sound doctrine, and we are happy to say, that it is a doctrine which is generally acquiesced in by the colored people, however obnoxious it may be to the Freeman."

is not borne out by any statement on this or any other matter that has emanated from it, as the article so provokingly true against the Advertiser proves, where the Freeman says:

"We are utterly opposed to mob law, believing that in this country, the proper way is the better, and hope that the colored people will yet see to it, to bring the strong arm of the law to bear upon every slaveholding miscreant who may intrude himself into the Canadas, for such purposes as Messrs. Shawhan and Payne have come. But in view of all the circumstances, we see less depravity in such demonstrations, as that made at Chatham, than in the eager defence for slaveholders, set up by professedly moral and Christian presses."

Now I would like to see any thing from the Advertiser more strongly opposed to mobs than that, notwithstanding the excuse for their movement at that time, which in view of the voluntary, of the Advertiser and Colonist, was justifiable, and however much the Advertiser may plead exposure of the member for Kent, it is the sort of aid and comfort most acceptable to slaveholders, whether Editors mean it or not. The Advertiser speaks of what is acquiesced in "by colored people," of what it has done for them; volunteers advice to this journal, as to the course it should pursue towards the "friends" of the colored people, seeing the great influence of said "friends," to damage the interests of these said colored people, provided they do not hear what they tell them, and ends by saying:

"It would be well for our cotemporary in future to see that in its zeal to advocate the interests of the colored population, that it adheres for the future, a little more closely to facts, and not attempt to give a false coloring to the language of its contemporaries; such a course would secure for it that degree of respect and attention from the intelligent portion of the community which at present it does not receive.

In reference to what the "colored people generally think of mobs, and what they do not, I may be allowed to know a little as well as the Advertiser, seeing my knowledge of them, relation to them, and acquaintance with them, are at least equal to his, whatever opinion he may hold to the contrary. It may not be so clear, though, that I would be as able to give advice without being asked for it. To do that, though little brains are needed, the requisites would be to be called a "white" friend; to have some assurance, a very lively interest in the pockets, and an inexhaustible fund of conceit; not being blessed with these accomplishments, although I would be backward in advising the Advertiser to give counsel when solicited, and meantime to attend to its own business, it is evident that such would be the better course for it.

We are told that it has called the member for Kent to account, for language towards colored people? Well, suppose it has, every respectable journal in the Province has done that,—what else should it have done, and what great credit should be attached to doing its duty? Any demagogue could have done as much.

It has said:—

"Had this been his intention when he came here, he must have been convinced on his arrival, that he could not by any means succeed, for we think it will not be maintained there is a man in Chatham or in Canada, in whose breast dwells a spark of British feeling that would not put forth every effort in his power to prevent a heartless slaveholder, (as we fear too many of them are,) from forcing a free man to return to a state of degradation and bondage, and we think a knowledge of this fact should have been sufficient to have convinced those who congregated at the B—— Hotel, on Sunday last, that there were no grounds for alarm on this matter."

It has said and done these two things, and in its estimation these are sufficient to entitle it to the position of a dictator to the Freeman.

The Advertiser is a Reformer, the Kent member is a Conservative: so it does what will likely strengthen its party, as the Conservatives of Kent, represented by their member, do not ask for the patronage of colored men, and as the Reformers do not refuse their support, we can get at the great regard for their interests at once.

Now, a few questions to this "friend" of ours, which of course he will not answer, seeing he has told some things he has done, in order to see if what he has done will in any way counterbalance what he has not, but should have done. When have you asked for equal school privileges, in your public schools, for the children of the respectable colored voters of Chatham, the people whom you seem to love so dearly, and how frequently have you urged that point? When did you allude to the black injustice done colored passengers on your Chatham boats, by the contrivance of the "Colored Cabin?" What measures have you opposed to the unequal division of the town into wards, by which the influence of colored voters would be weakened—eh? What have you had to say about the insults offered to the entire colored population of your town, by "Negro Serenaders," with their caricatures of the colored people, and which are so well known to your citizens, and so distasteful to the colored people? When has your influence been extended in favor of the section of Chatham, so much occupied by them, so as to increase their convenience on wet weather? Your readers have read plenty about side walks in other directions! Has your interest in them made you ask for a bridge or a plank for their accommodation? Have you seen them in their meetings, schools, societies, houses, or any where but the meetings held about election times, when their votes are wanted for your partizans? You know much about them, except what you see of them, shut out of your schools, off at arms length, socially and religiously, except when you ask them to take your paper, and when you get close to them to get the pay for it. Do something for them, besides trying to sow discord among them for your paper's interest, before you take the Provincial Freeman to task, and be able to understand it before you attempt to dictate to it. It has as large a share of respect and attention from the intelligent portion of the community, as any paper of its age going, and that owing entirely to its firm adherence to truth, and determination to maintain the right at all hazards, and knows what estimation to put upon your assertion to the contrary. The Advertiser, after the fashion, of "we, the little dog that caught the fox," though getting comparatively little of the chastisement justly deserved by it and the Colonist, has taken more than its share, and as it spoke for the pair, in this case, there is no reason to suppose it unwilling to share with that paper any honors slaveholders may be pleased to confer. The New Orleans Picayune, as has been seen by the last number of the Freeman, has been pleased to mark its approval of the Colonist's course towards the fugitives, and the Advertiser can safely be allowed to take the flattering favors upon itself, at least until it learns that the Provincial Freeman does not live by the grace of the Kent Advertiser, and other papers of Canada, that show their "friendship" for the colored people by pleasing the slaveholders, or scorning the fugitives.

M. A. Shadd.
Chatham, Sept. 5, 1855.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Mr. Editor.—After a stay of eight months in the sunny South, the Egypt of America, I returned to the Queen City, last Saturday, and I am a subscriber to your wide-spread journal, and as I have in by-gone-days occasionally contributed to the same my little mite, thereby hoping to interest some of your many readers, I now, as a pledge of my fidelity to your great cause, beg leave to present to the public, through the columns of the Freeman, a few thoughts of the present excited feelings, as manifested here.

I very probably would have troubled you with my "Correspondence" ere this time, had I been in a convenient position, but as I was in a country where the sweet breezes of Liberty have never yet been wafted, and where to publicly advocate the cause of human rights, could only be attoned for by death or "extermination," not only to a colored man, but the whites are alike execrable, especially if the name or interest of Her Majesty is brought to bare; but after returning to the North, where every man has the freedom of speech, and the privilege of the press—where the colored people are not quite good enough to unite in Common Schools with the whites, but have separate schools established for their special benefit—where colored people are honest enough to have their oaths in the Courts of the sovereignty, but not capable of enjoying the elective franchise—and where the colored people can form themselves into Military Companies, and have muskets sent to them from the Government, to parade the streets with great bombast and pomp, in honor of the Glorious Fourth! and the anniversary of their organization—I feel free to speak.

Yesterday was a day of great excitement in Cincinnatti, the "Attuck Blues," the first Colored Military Company ever organized in Cincinnatti, turned out in full dress parade, to celebrate the first anniversary of their organization. At 2 o'clock, p. m., the appointed time, they met in their armory, on Third Street; and at 4 o'clock, although the rain was falling in torrents, as if for some special purpose or design, the "Blues" opened wide their doors, and proceeded into the streets, with their "white pants" on, as had been previously ordered, thereby declaring that they were ready at any time to protect the American Flag, her Union, and her Slaves, as they are. They marched from their Hall, bearing the United States guns in their hands, and with the inscription, "U. S." upon their cartridge boxes, signifying—we love our country and laws, regardless of her three million of slaves—our own bone and sinew—regardless, too, I say, of the condition of the many thousands in the so-called free State, who cannot even take passage upon a steamboat leaving a port of any slave State, without upon the authority of some responsible white man—his presence generally being indispensable. I witnessed this fact, personally, a few days since, on attempting to leave Lousville, Ky., for this City; but in meting out justice and judgment to both sides of the subject, I must say that the opposition the colored people meet with in travelling, upon the thoroughfares of this country, is not altogether confined to the slave States. I am very well aware, both Indiana and Illinois are participators in the miserable and fiendish practice of obstructing the passage of colored persons through them, respectively; such I know to be the fact. An instance of that nature is now fresh upon my memory; I regret to relate it, but for the sake of justice, I cannot forbear. I am not disposed to give the name of a gentlemen who was the subject of the recent outrageous opposition presented by a Conductor, on one of the trains leaving Jeffersonville, Ind., and connecting directly with the O. & M. R. R., for Cincinnatti, to which I have just referred, in consequence of my limited space; but, if called for, I will not hesitate to give every particular, to substantiate the fact, at any future day. Think of these wrongs, as foul and dark as midnight workings, O ye "Attuck Blues!"

But, dear readers, do not be influenced by my theories and general course of remarks, that the Colored Military system is not appreciated and admired here, for the contrary was fully evinced yesterday; the procession and general proceedings were well attended, by numerous spectators, ladies as well as gentlemen; but by the way, permit me to inform you that I was an eye-witness of many a beautiful young lady, who appeared at the armory, before the line of march was taken, and while the watery torrents were not yet stayed, who were attired in the most gaudy and delicate bib-and-tucker of the day; and, while thus adorned, to beautify and give zest to the cause, were forced to seek shelter under door awnings, strange gentlemen's umbrellas, and in the vestibules of restaurants, &c.; and there were many others, who, finding it necessary, bent their way, soldier-like, through the rain.

Excuse the length of my letter, as I have been absent so long.

W. W. TATE.

Cincinnatti, Sept. 4, 1855.

Terrible Railroad Accident.

Twenty-three Persons Killed--Many Wounded.

A telegraphic despatch to this office, published in the Commercial, yesterday, reported an accident on the New Jersey railroad, with some loss of life. The despatch, however, contained few particulars, and only mentioned that a train had been despatched from Camden, with surgeons to the scene of the disaster. Fuller reports, received after we went to press, prove the calamity to have been much greater than would be supposed from the tenor of the first despatch. Indeed in respect to its fatal results, the catastrophe approaches in magnitude the sadly remembered slaughter of Norwalk, although the cause of it appears to have been purely accidental, no blame attaching to the railroad employees beyond the fact that the signal rope connecting the cars is reported to have been out of order. It does not seem probable, however, that had the contrary been the case, the fearful disaster could have been avoided. The train to which this frightful calamity occurred left Philadelphia for New York, yesterday morning, at the usual time, 20 minutes past 10 o'clock. The accident occurred between one and two miles this side of Burlington. At this place a curve where the up and down trains usually meet, and the rule of the road is that in case either train is behind time, the one in time shall wait ten minutes and then proceed cautiously, the one behind time switching off and backing into a side track when they come in sight of each other. This rule appears to have been duly observed, and when the train from N. Y. came in sight, the engineer of the Philadelphia train immediately reversed his engine so as to go into the turn off, and give the road to the New York train, his own being beyond time. Unfortunately at this moment a gentleman named Heincken, said to be a physician, who, in a two horse carriage containing four ladies, was waiting to cross the track, drove upon it. Being in the rear of the train, the engineer did not see the obstruction, and the hindmost passenger car came in collission with the carriage, by which the horses were immediately killed, and the carriage was broken into fragments, although the driver and the ladies appear to have escaped almost unhurt. It is reported that the conductor saw the impending danger, and attempted to give the signal to the engineer, but the signal rope was out of order. He then endeavored to pass through the cars to communicate personally with the engineer, but the collision occurred before he reached him. The concussion threw the hindmost car off the track, down an embankment eight or ten feet high. The train must have been backing at considerable speed, for the next two cars were thrown upon the first, and a fourth car was thrown over and beyond the three. The baggage car, tender, and engine, remained up the top of the embankment and were considerably injured. The cars that were thrown down the embankment was broken into fragments. The scene, as may well be imagined, now became distressing in the extreme. So soon as those who were unhurt recovered from the shock, they nobly set to work to relieve the sufferers and extract from the ruins of the cars the dead and wounded. The shrieks of the latter are represented to have been truly appalling. So far as yet can be ascertained, the number of killed is twenty-three, and forty or fifty are reported wounded. Of the twenty-three killed, eleven are said to be residents of Philadelphia. The list of wounded does not nearly come up to the number reported. It is confessedly incomplete, but we still hope the number reported is exaggerated. —N. Y. Spectator, Aug. 30.

The Telegraph of Aug. 31st, from Burlington, states that the number killed by the Railroad accident is now ascertained to be only twenty. The two bodies not recognised yesterday, prove to be those of Mr. Humphrey, of Illinois, and Hugh Jarvis, of Newark. The wounded are mending rapidly.

A quarterly meeting of the Meth. Church North, was broken up, a few days since, in Platte County, Mo., by a mob of Atchison and Stringfellow ruffians, led by a Dr. Walker. The Rev. Mr. Morris was seized while preaching, amid shouts of 'shoot him,' 'hang him.' He was finaly released on a promise to leave the place. The other preachers escaped during the disturbance. The mob brought tar, feathers and hemp with them, Platte County will have a very select society after Atchinson and Stringfellow get it thoroughly sifted of all opposing elements.

If we are correctly informed, this same Dr. Walker headed the mob against Park and Patterson.—Kansas Herald of Freedom

Emancipation of Slaves by a Free Colored Woman.

Mrs. Mary Meacham, a free woman of color, yesterday appeared at the County Court, and acknowledged a deed of emancipation to Elizabeth Lucas, a light colored mulatto, about thirty years old, and her children, Samuel and Allison. D. T. WILLIAMSON, Watchmaker, Jeweller, &c.,

ST. PAUL STREET, ST CATHARINES

IN returning thanks to the Ladies and Gentlemen of St. Catherines, and the adjacent Towns, and Villages, would say, that he is still doing business in his Old Stand, in the premises a few doors West of Mr. Wm. Barr's Store

He has just received a large stock of CLOCKS AND WATCHES, of different styles, and of superior quality. Also, a large quantity of JEWELRY, such as, Gold Bracelets, Ear Rings, Finger Rings, Medallions, Breast Pins, Cuff Pins Chains, Pencils, Opera Glasses, Spectacles. and various other articles, and trusts by strict integrity, moderate charges, and close attention to business, to merit a share of public patronage.

A few of SETH THOMAS' very superior Clocks and Watches on hand, to which the attention of the public is directed.

☞ All articles sold by D. T. Williamson, warranted to be what represented.

☞ Particular attention paid to Repairing, in all its branches, and work done with neatness and despatch and WARRANTED.

☞ Please call and see my Goods.

D. T. WILLIAMSON.

St. Catharines, 22. 18-1y

TAKE NOTICE.

ANY person or persons acquainted with THOMAS WILLIAMS, of Louisville, Ky., would render satisfaction to his Father, by writing to the Provincial Freeman Office, Chatham, C. W. Thomas Williams, some years past, lived with Chapman Coleman, of Louisville, and after leaving Mr. Coleman, went to Pittsburg, Pa.; but after the passage of the Fugitive Slave Act, he came to Canada, since which time I have not been able to learn his whereabouts.

JOHN SPARKS,

Clock and Watch Maker.

WILLIAM STREET,

CHATHAM, C. W,

TAKES this method of announcing to the Citizens of Chatham, and Kent County generally, that he has opened the CLOCK AND WATCH MAKING Business, and is prepared to wait on all who may favor him with a call, and hopes by strict attention to business to share a portion of the public patronage. He has just received a variety of CLOCKS & WATCHES, of a superior class, also, a beautiful stock of JEWELRY, to which the attention of the Ladies and Gentlemen are especially directed

☞ All kinds of CLOCKS, WATCHES, AND JEWELRY Cleaned and Repaired, on the most reasonable terms, for cash.

Chatham, Aug. 22. 18-1y

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes—I can just go to T. W. WILSON'S Boot Establishment, rear of Smith's Grocery, and you'll get a pair that you must speak well of."

"What do you say in regard to the quality of the work?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker, many are the days that I've drawn the awl."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, in the rear of Smith's Grocery, King Street East, any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work, so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go!"

"I'm ready. Are you a cash man?"

"I am—for he who pays cash clips the discount off at and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

T. W. WILSON.

THE CANADA

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT

CAPITAL $200,000.

HUGH C. BAKER, Esq., President
JOHN YOUNG, Esq., Vice-President.

ASSURANCES may be effected in this Company on single or joint lives, or on the contingency of one life surviving another; for the whole term of life, or for a limited period; by a single payment, or a limited number of payments; or annual payments only ceasing at death; to secure a sum at any given age, or at death, should death occur before the attainment of that age. Endowments for children, immediate or deferred annuities, and generally any transaction contingent on the value and duration of life, may be effected in this Company.

Among the advantages offered by this, the only Life Assurance Company ever established in British North America, may be enumerated moderate rates and small expenditures; local management and speedy settlement of claims; liberal conditions, especially in reference to lapsed policies.

Prospectuses, forms of proposal, and full information as to the prosperous condition of the Company, may be had from

SAMUEL S. MACDONELL,
Agent.

CAUTION.

FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangementas colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 20th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obed. servant.

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

Information Wanted

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. If she will call on or communicate by letter with Robert Phillips, Centre St., Toronto, she will hear news of much importance relating to her property.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the Southern Apostacy."

In December 1841, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

BY S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF "PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD," "PARLEY'S FAMILY LIBRARY," "PARLEY'S TALES," &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when an event happened. In the present work therefore the geography of each country whose history is cited, is given; and to aid the reader, seventy splendid maps have been added. Careful attention also, has been paid to Chronology, so that at every page and every chapter the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement, by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their due place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the late revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, chosen with a view to illustrate and embellish the text. Presenting views of monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the implements and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a Cyclopedia of History, and Universal Gazetteer, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference

The work is in one imperial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1851.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds a similar, but brief history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly valuable. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although, as Dean Swift says of "the ancients and the moderns," in some people will find many a dozen volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than the one under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives us many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It is a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor.

ICE! ICE!! ICE!!!

THE Undersigned begs to return his best thanks to his Customers, for the liberal patronage he has received for the last nine years, and to announce that he has enlarged and added to the number of his ICE HOUSES, having now four, which are filled with pure and wholesome Spring Water Ice, from Yorkville. He is prepared to supply the same to Customers, by contract or otherwise, during the season, commencing from the 1st of June next. The Ice will be conveyed by waggon daily, to places within six miles of Toronto.

All orders sent to THOS. F. CARY, Hairdresser, Front Street, two doors from Church Street, will be punctually attended to.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that [illegible] family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Our [illegible] defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS CAREY, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR

(whose name is withheld)

for whose productions, we design [illegible] following:

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. [illegible] of "One Year a Wife," &c.

We purpose following this with an original [illegible] designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,

OR

The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,

A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavor to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humorous Anecdotes, Valuable Prices Current and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Domestic Receipts, &c.

Our [illegible] Correspondents [illegible] Reports, so far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure, Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture etc, from the pens of our best writers, with those selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. The Arts, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. The Markets will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. The Children will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,

in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz —To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the people, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, and their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been [illegible] and acquitted themselves honorably [illegible] Africa, "the first martyr of the Revolution," to Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distingu

Poetry.

From the British Friend.

The Cry of the American Slave.

There's promise of freedom
For me and for mine;
I hear the glad tidings,
I see the light shine;
But it shineth afar yet,
The hill-tops are bright,
While the vale where the slave lies
Is gloomy as night;
And the voice of deliverance
Sounds faint, where the cries
And the groans of the scourged
And the fettered arise.

Press on my white brothers!
The tyrants are strong,
Ye have giants to cope with—
Oppression and Wrong:
Be brave, my white brothers!
Your work is of love;
All good men pray for you,
And God is above,
And the poor slave he crieth
Unto ye for aid—
O, be not discouraged!
O, be not afraid!

From the cotton plantation,
The rice-swamp, the mill,
The cane field, the workshop,
The cry cometh still:—
O! save us, and shield us,
We groan and we faint;
No words can our sorrows,
Our miseries paint:
Our souls are our masters',
They sport with our lives,
They torture and scourge us
With whips and with gyves.

We see scowling faces
On every hand;
We bear on our persons
The marks of the brand;
We're fed, and we're cared for,
Like horses and hogs;
We're cut and we're shot at,
And hunted with dogs;
Like goods we are bartered,
And given and sold,
And the rights of our race
There are none to uphold:—

Save ye, noble workers
In Freedom's great cause;
Save ye, loud proclaimers
Of God's righteous laws,
Who call us your brothers,
Though black be our skin,
And own we have hearts
These dark bosoms within—
Like feelings, emotions,
And passions, with those
Who spurn us, and scorn us,
And scoff at our woes.

O! press on, and hasten
The good coming time,
When the hue of the skin
Shall no more be a crime;
When a man, though a Negro,
May fearless give birth
To his thoughts, and his hopes,
With the proudest on earth;
When no master shall own him,
Nor tear him apart
From the wife of his bosom,
The child of his heart.

I know the time's coming,
I'm sure 't will be here,
For the voice of a prophet
Hath sung in mine ear—
"Make ready the way
For the advent of Him,
In whose presence the splendors
Of earth shall grow dim;
All pride shall be humbled,
Oppression shall cease,
And men, like true brethren,
Shall sojourn in peace."

I see the faint glimmer
Of light;—shall these eyes
Behold the bright sun
In its glory arise?
Shall these hands grasp the freedom
For which I and mine,
In the depths of our misery,
Languish and pine?
Life waneth apace—
I am feeble and cold—
O, hasten to snatch me
From Slavery's hold!

Miscellaneous.

A FORTUNATE KISS.

The following little story is by Miss F. Bremer, who vouches for its truthfulness:—

In the University of Upsala, in Sweden, lived a young student, a lovely youth, with a great love for studies, but without the means of pursuing them. He was poor, and without connexions. Still he studied, living in great poverty, but keeping a cheerful heart, and trying not to look at the future, which looked so grimly at him. His good humour and good qualities made him beloved by his young comrades. Once he was standing with some of them in the great square of Upsala, prattling away an hour of leisure, when the attention of the young man became arrested by a young and elegant lady, who, at the side of an elderly one, was walking slowly over the place. It was the daughter of the Governor of Upland, living in the city, and the lady with her was the Governess. She was generally known for her goodness and gentleness of character, and looked upon with admiration by the students. As the young men stood gazing at her, as she passed on, like a graceful vision, one of them suddenly exclaimed:—

"Well, it would be worth something to have a kiss from such a mouth."

The poor student, the hero of our story, who looked intently on that pure angelic face, exclaimed, as if by inspiration, "Well, I think I could have it."

"What!" cried his friends in a chorus, "are you crazy? Do you know her?" &c.

"Not at all," he answered, "but I think that she would kiss me now, if I asked her."

"What in this place, before all our eyes?"

"In this place, before your eyes."

"Freely?"

"Freely."

"Well, if she will give you a kiss in that manner, I will give you a thousand dollars," exclaimed one of the party.

"And I!" "and I!" cried three or four others; for it so happened that several rich young men were in the group, and the bets ran high on so probable an event. The challenge was made and received in less time than we take to relate it.

Our hero (my authority tells not whether he was handsome or plain; I have my peculiar ideas for believing he was rather plain, but singularly good looking at the same time) immediately walked off to the young lady, and said—"(mie froleen) my fortune is in your hands." She looked at him in astonishment, but arrested her steps. He proceeded to state his name and condition, his aspirations, and related, simply and truly, what had just passed between him and his companions. The young lady listened attentively, and, when he ceased to speak, she said blushingly, but with great sweetness—"If by so little a thing so much good can be effected, it would be foolish for me to refuse your request," and she kissed him publicly in the open square.

Next day the student was sent for by the Governor. He wanted to see the man who had dared to seek a kiss from his daughter in that way, and whom she had consented to kiss so. He received him with a scrutinizing bow, but after an hour's conversation was so pleased with him that he ordered him to dine at his table during his studies at Upsala.

Our young friend pursued his studies in a manner which soon made him regarded as the most promising scholar in the University. Three years were now passed since the day of the first kiss, when the young man was allowed to give a second one to the daughter of the Governor, as his intended bride.

He became, later, one of the greatest scholars in Sweden, and as much respected for his learning as for his character. His works will endure while time lasts, among the works of science; and from this happy union sprang a family well known in Sweden even at the present day, and whose wealth and high position in society are regarded as trifles in comparison with his wealth of goodness and love.

Democratic Tendencies of Science.

At the recent meeting of the Society for the Advancement of Education, Prof. Olmstead read a paper upon the Democratic Tendencies of Science. He showed that Science tends to promote political equality, to do away with distinctions of class, and bring the country up to the same level of intelligence as the city. Inventions, he said, had elevated the masses in three ways—1. By improvements in the means of locomotion. 2. By the diffusion of intelligence through the medium of newspapers. 3. By the multiplication of conveniences and elegancies of life. Before the invention of locomotives there had existed a great difference between the rich and the poor in their modes of travelling. The rich man rolled along in his carriage, while his poor neighbour jogged along on horseback or on foot. The rich merchant travelled in the public stages, which were too expensive for the poor tradesman, who was compelled to trust to some humbler conveyance. There was, therefore, little intercourse in those times between the rich and the poor, the intelligent and the uneducated, while travelling. The inhabitants of the country were called by their city cousins countryfied, and ridiculed for their ignorance of the world. It had been his fortune to be country bred, and he well remembered the first visit he paid to town, riding on a rough nag and followed by a troop of boys, shouting "Country! country!" What a contrast does the present day present to this state of things. If one enters the saloon of a steamboat he finds men of all classes and occupations—merchants and farmers, lawyers and mechanics, teachers and statesmen—all mingled together, and not distinguishable by any peculiarity of dress. The [illegible] which formerly prevailed [illegible] away with. In Connecticut he knew no other distinctions [illegible] those of the vicious and virtuous, the wise and idle. In the land of steady, the scholar finds himself by the side of the mechanic and the farmer—they come to conversation, and each discovers that he knows something which the other does not; the scholar finds that the mechanic and farmer are not ignorant, and the latter finds that the scholar is not proud. He had been lecturing lately in different parts of Connecticut, and had been astonished to find such a rapid increase in elegance and luxury. One might find in the villages of Connecticut houses equal in convenience and elegance to the most comfortable houses in this city. The diffusion of newspapers had tended greatly to the education of the people. In old times the mail travelled slowly, and papers were a long time reaching their destination. They were expensive too, and the country people often formed joint-stock concern, and shared the subscription to a single paper among several. Steamboats had first facilitated the spread of news, railroads aided in the work, and the telegraph had completed it. Now the most distant quarters of the land are informed of the arrival of a steamer, of a fall in the price of stocks, or the fighting of a battle, as soon as the inhabitants of the city. Again, Science has rendered the conveniences and luxuries of life accessible to all. We dress a great deal better than our fathers, and live in much finer houses, and yet we do not work so hard. Scientific institutions tend to elevate the masses by educating them. In Europe such establishments are aristocratic, but they are not so in this country.

A Jealous Wife.

An anecdote is told of a wife who was very jealous of her husband, who was a worthy member of the Masons. One evening a bundle came to the house for him, and labelled "Private." Of course this was sufficient for female curiosity, and therefore she indulged in an inspection. Horror of horrors! Blankets, baby's linen, and bird's eye, &c., greeted her astonished eyesight, and dreams of "two families" floated through her brain. The husband soon came in, and after tea, when his wife discovered in his eye the treachery of conduct as she supposed, he took the bundle and walked out—but not alone, for his jealous wife was on his track. The faithless husband little imagined that she who considered herself so foully wronged was hovering after him. He stopped at the house of a friend, who also joined him—carrying a small bundle. The wife became doubly excited, for the prospect of having a companion in misery, did not impress her with the idea of a diminution of her grief, but only an addition to it. She followed closely and soon they halted in front of a small tenement, which they entered. Here she paused to hold a council of war. What tactics to follow she was in doubt, but resolving to storm the citidel, she knocked, and instantly brushing by a little child, in a second stood before the astonished husband, the embodiment of injured innocence. Her feelings were about to express themselves, when the scene before her caused her to reflect. A poor woman on a sick bed, a babe not old enough for christening, a child in a crib, and two little girls in bed met her eye. She read the story at a glance, and returned home under the escort of her lord and friend, who assured her that she had discovered the great secret of the masonry. She never arrived at a false conclusion from appearances again.

NEGRO WIT.

The writer of the following vouches for its truthfulness, he being the party known as Mr. L. The other parties are a speculator in negroes, of a brown complexion, whom we shall call "Moore," a mulatto slave named Sam, who could read his Bible and was a member of the church, and an absentee named Enoch Manuel, who was a notorious rogue.

In one of our Southern cities, not a thousand miles off, while Mr. L. was standing on the sidewalk, conversing with Sam, Mr. Moore came up, and, pointing to Sam, said—

Moore.—Mr. L. don't you want to see Enoch Manuel's picture?

Sam.—Dare now, mass Moore, don't compare me to Enoch; kase Enoch's a rogue, and I'se honest.

Moore.—Well, but the complexion.

Sam.—Dare now, mass More, you ought not said dat, kase dare's not much difrunce 'twixt you and me dare (drawing his finger across his own forehead).

L.—Moore, you'd better drop that boy.

Moore.—No, he's just the boy I like; if I had him about New Orleans I could get a high price for him. (Then turning to Sam, continued): Boy, are you a slave or free?

Sam.—I'm bofe, sir.

Moore.—How do you make that out?

Sam.—De Scripture say, "If you be called bein' free, you Christ's servant; if you be called bein' a servant, you Christ's free man.

L.—Moore, I told you to drop that boy.

Moore.—Look here, boy, I should like to see your master; where can I find him?

Sam.—Mass Moore, do you raly want to find my master?

Moore.—I do.

Sam.—Well, Mass More, do you go into de wilderness—you pull off your hat, you get down 'pon your knees, and' seek him wid all your heart—you'll find him!

Moore walked off, and we gave Sam a fip and came away.—Baltimore Patriot.

[Sam was probably meditating a journey to Canada, and anxious to be thought a contented slave, in order to avert suspicion.]

Flying Machine.

The Paris Academy of Science has lately been investigating the flying machine invented by Don Diego de Salamanca. The machine consists in a case two feet long and one foot wide, adapted to a band of leather round the waist, buckled behind. The two iron rods, fastened to the case support a small piece of wood on which the feet repose. The case contains a simple and ingenious mechanism, similar to that employed to set an automaton in motion; the mechanism is worked by means of a handle, which sets at work two large wings, ten feet long, made up of very thin caoutchoc, covered with feathers, and the wings may be so worked as to produce vertical, perpendicular, or horozontal flying. The number of turns given to the handle determines the height to which it may go. The handle has to be turned every quarter of a league to regulate the distance, and the operation of turning lasts one minute. Horizontal flying is the most difficult; the wings beat the air like the feet of a swan when it swims.—Old Countryman.

Served Him Right.

A friend relates to us, that being the other day in the office of one of the most extensive printing concerns at the capital, an American dealer in Ink came in and exhibited samples of the article, and as the price and terms proposed seemed reasonable, and he had a persuasive tongue, an agreement for some £400 worth was on the eve of being made. At this juncture, an allusion to the war brought out the American very powerfully against the Allies, and especially against England. He expressed very strong hopes of the defeat of the besiegers, and of the readiness of Uncle Sam, if circumstances favoured, to make a foray into Canada, after which, his patriotic eloquence being expanded, he returned to the all-but completed arrangement for the ink. By this time the feelings of the intended purchaser had undergone quite a change, and he very briefly informed Johnathan that he would not take the ink. The explosion of a bomb-shell could hardly have been less desired, but all attempts to change the resolution of the loyal printer were useless.—Montreal Pilot.

Essentials to Productive Farms.

The following fifteen essentials to productive farming are from the pen of the American Farmer, which is, we believe the oldest agricultural paper in the United States:

1. Good implements of husbandry, and plenty of them, which should always be kept in perfect order.

2. Deep ploughing and thorough pulverization of the soil, by the free use of the harrow, drag, or roller.

3. An application of lime, marl, or ashes, where calcarious matter or potash may not be present in the soil.

4. A systematic husbanding of every substance on a farm capable of being converted into manure, a systematic protection of such substances from loss by evaporation or waste of any kind, and a careful application of the same to the lands under culture.

5. The draining of all wet lands, so as to relieve the roots of the plants from the ill effects of a superabundance of water, a condition equally pernicious as drouth to their healthful growth and profitable fructification.

6. The free use of the plow, cultivator, and hoe, with all row cultured crops, so as to keep down, at all times, the growth of grass and weeds, those pests which prove so destructive to crops.

7. Seeding at the proper time, with good seed, and an equal attention as to time, with regard to the period of working crops.

8. Attention to the construction and repair of fences, so that what is made through the toils and anxious cares of the husbandman, may not be lost through his neglect to protect his crops from the depredations of stock.

9. Daily personal superintendence, on the part of the master, over all the operations of the farm, no matter how good a manager he may have, or however faithful his hands may be, as the presence of the head of a farm, and the use of his eyes, are worth several pairs of hands.

10. Labor-saving machinery, so that one may render himself as independent as needful of neighborhood labor, as a sense of the comparative independence of the employer upon such labor begets a disposition of obedience and faithfulness on the part of the employed.

11. Comfortable stabling and sheds, for the horses and stock, all necessary outbuildings, for the accomodation of the hands, and protection of the tools and implements, as well as for the care of the poultry.

12. Clover and other grasses to form a part of the rotation of crops, and these to be at the proper period plowed in, to form pabulum for succeeding crops.

13. The clover field to be either plastered or ashed, each succeeding spring—one bushel of the former, and six of the latter per acre.

14. To keep no more stock than can be well kept, but to be sure to keep as many as the farm can keep in good condition, as it is wise policy to feed as much as possible of the crops grown on the farm, and thus return to it that which has been abstracted from it.

15. To provide a good orchard and garden—the one to be filled with choice fruits of all kinds—the other with vegetables of different sorts, early and late, so that the table may, at all times, be well and seasonably supplied, and the supplies contribute to increase the wealth of the proprietor.

"A Filibustering Descent on Canada, under the garb of Religion."

Under this caption, the Berlin Telegraph of Friday last has an article which gives an expose of underhand means which are being employed by Brother Johnathan, under the "garb of religion" to disseminate republican principles and sentiments in Canada, sooner that all other means of effecting annexation have failed. It appears that the American Sunday School Union have recently sent a number of young men to this Province, for the alleged purpose of "organizing a system of Union Sunday Schools in Canada." These young men are busy at present, especially in the western Counties, circulating Union Sunday School publications, which are found tinged with republican sentiments, and notwithstanding the professed piety and benevolence of their design, which are full of political doctrines highly prejudicial to British rule and British institutions. We are sorry to learn that the above named Association, which has heretofore accomplished so much good in the United States, should thus be made subservient to such a purpose. We quote from our contemporary:—

Let us examine their books. Here is "the Primer." Now, what does it teach? A "correct knowledge of the various institutions of our country." What country? The "United States," of course! Let us read further. Our country is divided into 33 states, each of which has," &c. What country? The United States, of course! Let us read further on in the hope of finding something adapted to the Canadian "idea." We have now got to the end. Vain hope! Canada, in the estimation of these pious book-venders is apparently unworthy of being noticed in the same volume which details so minutely the "benefits" and "the blessings" of the "free and enlightened Government of the United States. Presumptious Canuck, to look for the like—expect the like—or hope for the like! Let us turn over to some other of their books. "All kings are tyrants," "our forefathers were persecuted by the Britishers," "remember Plymouth rock," "the people should be their own rulers," &c. Now the cloven foot is showing itself! Now, the smile gleaming on that young "missionary's" countenance can be intercepted! His object is a political one—a seditious one—a national one. He is not of Kinney's expedition! No! he carries no revolver with him! That would look suspicious! He carries the Bible in his hand. For the present it is the weak minded he wishes to gain over to his opinions! The sight of a revolver he knows would "spoil the fun," frighten his prey, and endanger his own safety!

Is it reasonable—is it desirable—is it necessary—is it right, that books containing such sentiments (tinged as they undoubtedly are by republicanism of the worst form) should be placed in the hands of our children, to teach them the first principles of common education? Are such sentiments, put into the mouths of the youth of Canada, calculated to inspire them with a hight-oned spirit of patriotism? Are such books calculated to impart to them a knowledge of the Political institutions of our own country? Are such books in a religious point of view well suited for Sunday School teachings? "But we think we hear some defender of these young men say, "these books tell the children of the sin of drunkenness—of lying—of deceiving—of cheating—of going to the theatre—of keeping bad company—of swearing—and in fact everything again which children should be warned." But what of slavery? Our friend looks blank. There is nothing in these books against the sin of slavery! Not a word. It does not exist in the catalogue, surely! Has Brother Johnathan then emancipated his chattels? It cannot be. He would have made too loud a boast of it.

Canadian Frankness.

The following frank admission, that there is more freedom and liberty to be enjoyed in Canada, than under the stars and stripes, across the lakes, is valuable,—not because any one here doubts the fact, but because Brother Johnathan has so very seldom candor to confess what must be patent even to himself. The Oswego Times of Monday says:—"There was one insignificant lecture in the address made by Mayor Magill, of Hamilton, at Doolittle Hall, on Friday, in response to a sentiment complimentary to the cities of Hamilton and Toronto, to which no reference was made in our notice of Saturday. After alluding to the Anglo-Saxon race, as leading the march of civilization, of freedom over this great Continent and the World—to our identity of origin—our common language, literature, history, principles and interest, the Mayor justly claimed for his own country the largest liberty. He said no such thing as slavery was known there, of any human being, of whatever nation, kindred or tongue. No matter whether born under an Indian or African sun, or by what oppression his rights may have been cloven down the moment the slave trod upon the soil of Canada, his chains fell from his limbs, and he stood forth in the dignity of a Freeman. This splendid sentiment, more remarkable for its truth and just application than for its originality, drew not a solitary responce from American lips. The very countenances of the citizens of Oswego betrayed the keen sensitiveness with which they felt the dark stain that attaches to our country and institutions."—Mail.

The Revenue of Great Britain.

The increase of the Revenue exhibit of Great Britain, for the fiscal year ending June 30th, when compared with the preceding years (1853-4) is nearly fifteen per cent—the marked increase being under the head of property tax, of which rates have been augmented.

Moral Reform Sisters.

Sisters in the [illegible] of truth and virtue, [illegible] trust of speak at your meetings, instead of bunkers, or those who apologise for the accursed system of slavery? Why not be consistent—what greater hindrance to the final triumph of your worthy enterprise than the system of American slavery; the blot and stench and curse of our nation and the world?

The fountain head, the hot bed, the great reservoir, of lewdness and fornication lies at the South. And the very men whom you invite to your platforms, are the upholders of this brothel house, by inviting to their pulpits and the communion table, the guilty abettors of this dark sin, do you, how dare you do thus? Brother Green, of the Sandwich Islands, reproved you gently, persuasively, earnestly, to desist from this conservative, popularity seeking course. He saw the growing inconsistency with weeping eye: and rebuked his sisters. He saw the evil—we saw it with tearful eye. "Oh, he's a D. D." Well, suppose he is an angel from heaven, and preach a false gospel, what then? "Let him be accursed"? certainly. Christ says so. Sisters, we speak this in love; in love to you, to the cause you advocate.—"Come out from among them"—"have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."

We rejoice to see "The Friend of Virtue," stand firm as a rock. "Consistency" is a jewel!"

Great Mass Meeting of Republicans.

Pursuant to notice, the Republicans of Chester county convened in the Court House of West Chester, on Saturday, Aug. 11, 1855, for the purpose of taking into consideration the necessity of concentrating the citizens of the country, irrespective of existing organizations under the title of the Republican Party. Whereupon the following gentlemen were appointed officers of the meeting:

President—Hon. A. R. McIlvaine.

Vice Presidents—Joseph H. Eason, John W. Davis, Dr. Mercer, John Parker, Thos. S. Cox, and John M. Kolton.

Secretaries—Wm. Whitehead and Thos. S. Taylor.

William Butler moved for a Committee of ten, which was amended to fifteen, to report resolutions expressing the views of this meeting.

The Chairman appointed Wm. Butler, Esq., Wm. Darlington, Esq., U. V. Pennypacker, Esq., Robert Parke, Enoch Harlan, Thomas K. Ball, E. J. Dickey, Benj. J. Pennock, Ezra Gray, Benj. Hollman, Edward P. Needles, James H. Strawbridge, Charles Bishop, Townsend Walters and Wm. Windle, who retired to the Grand Jury Room.

While the Committee on resolutions were absent, Hon. Francis James, by request, addressed the meeting.

Dr. Bartholomew Fussel then made some brief remarks.

R. D. Chalfant, of Ohio, formerly of Chester county, by invitation, also made some remarks.

Mr. Butler, on behalf of the Committee, reported the following resolutions.

Whereas, Slavery is the worst form of despotism; and in the infancy of the government, when the people were rejoicing in their liberation from the tyranny of Great Britain, and felt and appreciated the inestimable value of the great principles of rational freedom, all united in abhoring it. Its existence in the country was deplored—it was regarded as a great social and political evil, to be gotten rid of at the earliest practicable opportunity. That it should be extended or perpetuated, none expected and none hoped.

And, whereas, the Constitution of the United States was ordained "to establish justice, to promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of Liberty." Slavery was not one of its objects, is totally inconsistent with all its doctrines, and with it the government rightfully has no connection or sympathy whatever.

And, whereas, while we recognize the right of the Southern States to regulate their own internal affairs, without interference from us, it is our right to demand that slavery shall be confined to its present limits, that all connexion with, and responsibility for it on the part of the government shall cease—and that all territory over which the government has control shall be free.

And, whereas, the slave power has manifested a resolute determination to extend its dominion throughout the country—to crush out the spirit as well as the forms of liberty among us—has seduced Federal Judges, and made them supple instruments for its base purposes; has controlled the Federal Executive, and made him subservient to its wicked designs. Compacts, entered into under circumstances the most solemn, have been disregarded and broken up—an extended territory dedicated by the Missouri Compromise to freedom, has, in violation of plighted faith, and disregard of all honor, been thrown open to the traders in human flesh, who are now occupying it by force of arms, with a view to adding other slave States to the Union, and giving to the slave power, a complete and perpetual ascendancy over freedom in the nation. The issue of freedom or slavery—slavery, not in the South, but in the North—not where it now exists, but elsewhere—has been forced upon us by the South, therefore

Resolved, That sacrificing on the altar of our beloved country, all former party predilections, and differences of opinion on minor questions, we here pledge ourselves to one another to meet shoulder to shoulder, the aggressive spirit of the slave power—to unite, as men loving liberty, and having a common interest, in an unyielding, uncompromising and unceasing opposition to the extension of slavery.

Resolved, That the repose of the country, and the stability of the Union, require that the government shall be relieved of all connection with and accountability for slavery.

Resolved, That in attachment to the Constitution and Union of the States, and in all that makes up true patriotism, we yield precedence to none of our fellow-citizens of any quarter of the country, but we demand that the Constitution shall be preserved in its purity and spirit, that it shall be construed by the landmarks set by the fathers of the country, and that the Union shall be one of sovereign States in which the North shall not occupy the degrading position of vassalage.

Resolved, That the repeal of the Missouri Compromise was an outrage upon the free States—was a violation of plighted faith, and has destroyed the confidence heretofore existing between the free and the slave States.

Resolved, That no state erected from the [illegible] that compromise, should ever, under any circumstances, be admitted into the Union as a slave State.

Resolved, That the conduct of the President of the United States, in permitting a band of lawless ruffians to take forcible possession of the territory of Kansas, subjugate her peaceable inhabitants, and control her elections—in removing her Governor in obedience to the demands of the mob, exhibit him as the weak and willing instrument of the slave power—has justly degraded him in the estimation of honorable men, and entailed lasting disgrace upon the nation.

Resolved That the conduct of Governor Reeder in Kansas—the fearless and manly stand made by him against lawlessness and outrage—his persevering efforts to preserve the purity of the ballot box, and to protect the rights of the resident citizen, entitle him to our warmest regard—they reflect honor upon him and upon his native State.

Resolved, That the conduct of Judge Kane in the Wheeler slave case—his effort to prostitute the great writ of habeas corpus—designed solely to protect liberty—to the base purpose of enslaving a free woman and her children, and his imprisonment of Passmore Williamson, a native of this country, for a pretended contempt of Court, against the plainest principles of ordinary justice, should awaken the people to a sense of their danger.

And Whereas, in the infancy of this government the dangers of foreign influence were seen and felt, and "the Father of his Country," in his farewell address, affectionately called the attention of the people to this important subject.

And Whereas, experience has served to make these dangers more manifest, and to awaken the attention of the people more fully to them.

And Whereas, the most dangerous foreign influence exerted upon this country is through the ballots of men reared abroad, under governments radically different from our own, whose residence among us has been too short to rid them of early prejudices and the errors of education, and to enable them to understand and appreciate our institutions:—

And Whereas, reason as well as history, attest the fact that the love of country depends mainly upon birth and early association, and that the institutions of a country find their surest and safest lodgment in the hearts of its native citizens, therefore

Resolved, That while we regard the emigration to this country, of the peaceable industrious foreigner with favor, and welcome with warm hearts the oppressed of every land, we deem a change in the naturalization law such as will extend the probative period of the alien, to be required by the best interests as well of the adopted as of the native citizens.

Resolved, That Church and State ought to be separate in fact as well as in theory. And while we accord to all religious denominations freedom of conscience, and the right to worship in such manner as they may deem proper, yet the practice of voting under the influence of ecclesiastical leadership, exercised in foreign countries, we regard as incompatible with true republicanism, and at war with the spirit of our institutions.

Resolved, That the early republican simplicity of the Government should be restored, that it should be kept free from the dead ceremonies and senseless forms of foreign countries; and that it should be represented every where by men who fully understand and appreciate its institutions.

Resolved, That in this country there should be the freest toleration of opinion, both in religion and politics—that all citizens, whether native or adopted, have a common interest, and that efforts to excite bad feeling between them, by appeals to prejudices and passions, deserve the severest censure, and are worthy only of the scheming demagogue.

Resolved, That the laborer of this country should be protected in his industry, and that the people should be educated by a liberal system of public schools.

Resolved, That the sale of the public works of Pennsylvania should be effected as speedily as possible, upon terms as favorable to the State as can be obtained.

Resolved, That Intemperance is an evil, a fit subject for legislative action, and any constitutional legislation, tending to its extinction, should receive the hearty concurrence of all good citizens.

Resolved, That we cannot and will not be controlled by a party, which in subserviency to slavery is in advance of the South, and which panders to the worst passions and prejudices of the foreign population to obtain political power.

Resolved, That all citizens friendly to this movement be requested to meet at the usual places of holding township elections on the 8th day of September next, in their respective townships and boroughs, and elect two delegates to represent them in a country convention to be held in West Chester on the 11th day of September next, to nominate a ticket to be supported by the Republican citizens of the county, at the ensuing election.

Resolved, That the party just organized be called the Republican Party.

The following gentlemen were appointed a Committee of Correspondence for the ensuing year.

Wm. Butler, Eber D. Haines, Thomas W. Parker, J. B. Wood, Sharpless Worrall, Richard L. Downing, Edwin James, Stephen Meredith, M. D.; Benjamin Hallman, John Cornog, Wm. Windle, Enoch Harlan, Isaac Speer, Robert Parke, Joseph Jefferis.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the papers of the county.

On motion adjourned.—Westchester (Pa.) Independent.

Slave Conspiracy in Mississippi.

The Marion (Miss.) Republican gives an account of the discovery of a negro conspiracy at Garlandsville, Jasper county. It says:—

'A trustworthy negro, after having received pledges of secrecy, revealed the existence of the conspiracy to an overseer, and requested him to repair to a certain place, in the midst of a dark, unfrequented swamp, and see for himself. The overseer did not go, but the next morning he took with him some friends, and went to the spot designated by the faithful negro. There they saw every indication of a large crowd having been assembled; horses had been tied up, fires kindled, and, from appearances, they calculated that upwards of one hundred negroes had there assembled on the preceding night. They left the spot, and the neighborhood was quickly alarmed. Several negroes were taken up, and among them the leader. The greatest excitement was prevailing in the country; a council was held, and it was determined that the negroes should be hung immediately; ropes were procured, and the sentence of the council was about to be executed, when the crowd relented fearing lest the innocent should perish with the guilty.

'The negroes were then severely whipped, and they confessed that the conspiracy extended throughout a large section of the country, that there existed several other organizations, which they called "schools," in the neighborhood, and that their object was to organize in sufficient force, and march, increasing their force as they went, to a free State. No arms or ammunition of any kind could be discovered; but the negroes confessed that they were to meet at Garlandsville, next Saturday night, to make a start. When asked why they selected that place as a rendesvouz, they could give no reason, and the presumption is that they intended to sack the place and murder the inhabitants. Two white men, they say, have been among them, but their names were not known to the negroes, nor was any thing developed which could identify them. Arms and ammunition are probably concealed somewhere, as such a scheme would never have been attempted without them.'

The Wheeler Slave Case.

The case of William Still, and five other colored men, charged with assault and battery, in the Court of Quarter Sessions, before Judge Kelly, was resumed yesterday morning. Messrs. Pierce and Gibbons made a motion for a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum, to bring Passmore Williamson into Court as a witness for the defendants. Mr. Webster objected. Judge Kelly said that in actions for riot and conspiracy, co-defendants could not be witnesses. The motion was over ruled. The evidence on both sides was closed on Thursday. Yesterday morning Mr. Webster commenced the summing up to the jury, on the part of the Commonwealth. Messrs. Pierce and Gibbons then followed, on the part of the defendants. The speeches of these gentlemen were replete with zeal, researches and eloquence. This morning Mr. Mann will address the jury on the part of the Commonwealth, after which Judge Kelly will deliver his charge to the jury.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Almost a Slave Case.

The Cincinnati Columbian says that a few days since, as a Missourian was on his way from Missouri to Virginia, up the Ohio river, with three slaves, a man, an old woman, and a girl about sixteen years of age, while changing boats at Cincinnati the man disappeared. As soon as his escape was discovered, the owner left the steamboat in which he had taken passage with the woman and girl, and hurried to the Kentucky shore. He had hardly done so when a habeas corpus for the girl was brought on board the boat by one of the deputy sheriffs. The sheriff was a little too late to redeem her from slavery.

The Right Triumphant.

On Monday last, Boston ceased to be, for the first time in her history, contumaciously unjust and basely proscriptive in regard to equal school rights among her children, irrespective of complexions distinctions. In what manner the change was received by all parties, may be seen by the following paragraph from the Evening Telegraph of that day:—

Re-opening of the Schools.

After the six weeks' vacation, parents, if not the children, were ready for the resumption of studies this morning. We never saw happier looking youngsters than those that tottled schoolwise about 8 o'clock.

The introduction of the colored youth into the schools, we are happy to say, was accomplished with general good feeling on the part of both teachers and white children. At the Phillips School, at the West End, one or two of the white boys were making a little merry sport at the colored pupils as they came up, but the principal, Mr. Hovey, stayed it at once by the quiet remark: 'Is that your politeness to strangers?' One enthusiastic white boy ran through Myrtle street, swinging his satchel, and crying out—'Hurrah! we are to have the darkies today, and I'm going to have one right side of me!' In the Bowdoin school, at the west end, some of the white misses, we hear indulged in a little obloquy, but it was soon terminated with a few kindly words. The appearance of the colored children in the heretofore by them unfrequented streets leading to the school houses created a 'sensation' among the neighbours, who filled the windows, probably in anticipation of trouble. So far as we can hear, there was none, however, in any part of the city.

The primary department of the Smith school had but seven pupils in attendance—the grammer department none. The abolition of this school will be an annual saving of $3,000 to the city.

Colored Children in Schools.

By the law of last winter, allowing the colored children to join the white schools, the Smith school, on Monday, was nearly depopulated, but seven primary school children attending, out of 89 composing it at last report, and none of the 80 then reported in the grammer school, a significant example of the effect of fusion on a primary organization.—Boston Post.

The Plague in Norfolk and Portsmouth.

We, (New York Commercial Advertiser) learn from conversation with a physician just returned from Norfolk and Portsmouth, leaving the latter place on Friday last, that the yellow fever is now raging to a fearful extent both among the white and black population. One half of all who are attacked die; the mortality among the negroes, however, is much the greatest, as they are 'bad patients,' refusing in many instances, to take medicine when attacked, generally expressing a wish to die, complaining of 'misery in the head,' or 'misery in the shoulder.' The detail of suffering in individual cases, and in whole families, is almost too harrowing for publication. In some instances, the master, mistress, and servants, are all sick at a time, and on attempting to separate the latter, they, if possible, seek their mistress' sick room, after hiding under the bed, in order that they shall not be discovered by the physician or nurses; many of the slaves are heard begging, as a last request, to be interred with their master or mistress, as the case may be—all being alike subject to attack and death. Of the fourteen physicians from Philadelphia, seven have been attacked by the prevailing disease, and three have died—so in proportion with the best of inhabitants, male and female, who have remained in these plague-stricken cities.

The pestilence has made orphans of a multitude of little ones—they are gathering into one building, and the Howard Association are doing for them all in their power; but that noble association have the well, the sick, dying and dead to care for. Their hearts and hands are full. Is there not some kind person in this great and highly favored city who will come forward to the aid of the little sufferers? They need fresh clothing, and need it now; they need many other things that the experience of mothers will enable them to suggest. We feel assured that their sufferings need only be made known here to be relieved. Since the above was put in type we have received the following communication:

The Committee appointed to obtain funds for the relief of the sufferers by pestilence at Norfolk, Portsmouth and Gosport, beg leave to inform their fellow citizens, that at the latest dates the malignity of the pestilence was increasing in those places, without any prospect of its abatement until checked by frost.

In Norfolk alone, there were from twelve to fifteen hundred on the sick list, while the ratio of mortality would be equal to that of thousands per day in such a population as ours. To add to the existing misery the small pox has now appeared among them.

The poor of this place must be aided until the pestilence disappears. The major part of the inhabitants who remain, are prevented from removing by their poverty; and not one-fourth of those persons who are left can find employment to support them.

The Howard Association has nearly exhausted its funds, while its appropriations for the relief of the sick and suffering amount to $8000 per day.

These facts are sufficient to awaken the sympathy of this community, and to call forth their prompt and active efforts to relieve this appalling degree of suffering. Our city, thus far, has been saved from this awful visit of pestilence, and there can be no better offering of gratitude to the kind Providence who has shielded us, than that of liberal contributions, for the relief of our suffering fellow citizens.

Donations can be sent to William H. Macy, Esq., President of the Leather Manufactures' Bank, who is the Treasurer of the Committee.

Minutes of the Dawn Convention.

The Convention of the friends of the British American Institute met, August 29th, 1855, in accordance with the Call of Mr. J. C. Brown, a Trustee of the said School, dated April 12th, 1855.

The people were largely represented, delegates having been appointed to the meeting from as far East as Toronto, and as far West as Amherstburg.

John Scoble having locked the door of the School-house, and not allowing the use of the Institute property to the Convention, or legal voters for the meeting, the organization of the Convention took place in the highway, on the Institution premises, and in front of the School-house.

Mr. Thomas W. Stringer, of Buxton, C. W., was called to the Chair, and Titus Basfield, of London, C. W., appointed Secretary.

A Committee to nominate permanent officers of the Convention was elected, as follows:—

Mr. Haywood Day, and Mr. Sam'l Gibbs, of Chatham, C. W., and Mr. John Jacobs, of Buxton.

This Committee reported—

For President—Thomas W. Stringer, of Buxton C. W.

For Secretary—Rev. Titus Basfield, of London, C. W.

On motion, it was voted that the Chair appoint a Committee upon Credentials.

The Committee appointed were—

Titus Basfield, of London; Robert Van Vranken, of Buxton; and James Hansbrow, of Chatham.

After which, the Convention, on motion, adjourned to the Methodist Meeting House, to complete the business.

On re-assembling, the officers in their places, the Convention was opened with prayer, by Elder William P. Newman.

On motion, the Convention appointed a Business Committee, as follows:

Elder W. P. Newman, of Dawn, C. W.; Messrs. James Hansbrow, H. J. Young, of Chatham.

The Committee immediately retired for consultation.

In the interim, Mr. J. C. Brown delivered an Address, detailing the History and Condition of the Institution.

The Business Committee then being called upon, reported as follows:—

Your Committee, to whom was confided the business of this Convention, beg leave to report, as follows:

Whereas, there is doubt expressed by interested persons, as to the validity of the Declaration of Trust of the Dawn Institute; and—

Whereas, it is also doubted whether any Trustees, appointed under that instrument, would be legal; therefore—

Resolved,—That a Committee of fifteen be appointed, to see that a Bill be filed in the Court of Chancery, for Upper Canada, against the original Trustees of the British American Institute, and their Assigns, for non-performance of their duty.

Resolved,—That Petitions be gotten up immediately, to the Legislature, praying that Honorable Body not to incorporate the Dawn Institute, except in the spirit of the original Declaration of Trust, which is signed by the former six Trustees, as the right of possession of the Institution property is yet to be decided by the Courts of the country.

Resolved,—That the Board of Trustees be augmented to twelve, in keeping with the letter and spirit of the Declaration of Trust.

All which Report was unanimously adopted.

The Convention then suspended its business, to allow the Legal Voters to elect the six additional Trustees.

Mr. J. C. Brown, being called to the Chair,

The Legal Voters being thus organized, in accordance with the provisions of the Declaration of Trust, the following persons were duly elected:—

Weldon Harris, of Camden, C. W.
Joseph C. Lewis, of Toronto.
John W. Lindsey, of St. Catharines.
George Francis, of Howard.
A. B. Jones, of London.
Peter J. Jackson, of Amherstburg.

The meeting of the Legal Voters then adjourned, and the Convention re-assembled, Thomas W. Stringer in the Chair.

The Convention then unanimously passed the following Resolution:—

That this Convention highly approve of, and do hereby endorse the election of the Trustees appointed to meet the requirements of the "Declaration of Trust."

On motion, it was unanimously voted by the Convention, that an Executive Committee of fifteen be appointed, in accordance with a recommendation of the Business Committee, and in reference to all the objects contemplated by this meeting—that Committee devising ways and means by which to carry out the sentiments of this Convention.

The persons elected were:—

J. C. Brown, of Chatham; Thos. F. Cary, and J. O. Bonner, Toronto; Rev. Richard Warren, Hamilton; Henry Gray, St. Catharines; Peter O. Banion, Brantford; Wm. Hamilton, London; Rev. H. J. Young, and James Hansbrow, Chatham; John Myers, Camden; Joseph Mason, Colchester; Coleman Freeman, Windsor; T. W. Stringer, and Van Vranken, Buxton, and Levi Foster, of Amherstburg.

The Convention then unanimously adopted the following:—

Resolved,—That the course of J. C. Brown, a Trustee of the British American Institute, in defending the rights of those for whose benefit the School was established, merits our hearty approval.

The following Resolution being presented, was also unanimously adopted:

Resolved,—That we highly disapprove of the conduct of John Scoble, in attempting to prevent our meeting, to-day, by closing and locking the door of the School-room of the Institution—the usual place of meeting.

On motion, the following was also adopted unanimously:—

Resolved,—That we tender our thanks to the Trustees of the Methodist Church, for the use of their meeting-house, for our assemblage.

On motion, it was voted to adjourn to meet at the call of the Executive Committee.

The Convention then separated, after prayer, by the Rev. H. J. Young.

Thos. W. Stringer,
President.

Secretary.

Yankee Piety in Canada.

In another column of to-day's issue will be found an article we clip from "The Mail.". It is worth the consideration of every lover of British Freedom, and hater of American Slavery in our country. It reveals the deep laid scheme of certain religionists of the United States, to subvert the very foundation of the Canadian Government, in the hypocritical name of "The American Sunday School Union;"—but better named, if we call it, The Union School of American Pirates.

If the publications of these pious hypocrites indicate their intentions, and certainly they do, then there is but little doubt, as to their ultimate purpose. It is now quite time that the Christian Ministry and Churches of our Country began to look to the design of their humble and long faced co-workers in their religious efforts, in behalf of the benighted of Canada? It is high time, that the unthinking and unsuspecting of the entire country should be put on their guard, respecting the so-called religious efforts of the Yankee organizations in our midst. Mark! They mean, if possible, to steal our beloved Country. And should they succeed, the beauties of Canada are to be marred by the demons of darkness. Our atmosphere is to be poisoned with the pestiferous breath of the Southern Man-stealer. Our forests must be filled, our mines worked, and our soil tilled by abject slaves, whose degraded presence, must embitter our very existence among them; for the sole benefit of a few Cotton Lords of the Godless Government of the "American Union," who will spend the avails to gratify selfishness, and curse the world. Under such rule our general improvements must cease. Our cities must dilapidate and go to ruin; our Banks must fail; our mercantile operations must come to an end. The purity of our Churches must wane, for God will be grieved. The free men and women, and happy children of our now prosperous Province, must become slavers, or die in defence of their liberty. Our entire country must become a vast hunting ground, for men and women, called Fugitive Slaves—(a misnomer) even by such as pretend to be friends—thus Choas must return and Despots reign. May Heaven forbid that such should be our Country's fate!

But that such may not be the case, we truly hope, that the Colored Canadians will keep their eyes open; the religious hypocrites, of "The Sunday School Union," of the United States and kindred organizations, whether they be in this or that country. So much caution, at least, we judge, is needed now, for it is doubtless true that the slaveholding religionists are making inroads upon us. Their ministers are welcomed in our pulpits, and the agents of their several Institutions have free access to our Churches; and there is no mistake that our youth are being corrupted by the bare Republican influence of the United States.

Whatever may be our own political views—we say frankly to our people, that the Reformers of Canada will bear watching? The Colored people of Canada must rise or fall with the Conservative Party of the Country."

Correspondence.

For the Provincial Freeman.

St. Catharines.

The Colored people of St. Catharines were thrown into a state of excitement on the 23rd of August, by what appeared to be an attempt to persuade a fugitive young woman, named Elizabeth Green, to go to the States, and so fall again into the hands of her former owners. Two previous attempts having been made; and a female, who, on the present occasion claimed to be an Aunt, but whose relationship was denied by the girl, being solicitous to get her consent, by representing the perfect security she would have in California. An attempt to prevent her abduction, and bring out the facts, was made by some citizens, by charging the parties implicated with an attempt to kidnap. The woman and her travelling companion were put in the lock-up, and finally spirited away secretly.

Mr. Aaron Young, a colored man, who was interested in the prosecution, was shut up, however, and £1 demanded by the magistrate, without even giving him a trial.

It is notorious that colored citizens of St. Catharines cannot hope for protection nor justice(?) in that town. Their rights, as taxpayers, are not recognized by the School Board, nor their rights as British subjects, by the Administrators of British law. There is great reason to believe, that the counsel employed by them on the occasion in question, were bought over to the side of the Slaveholders, as the most decided apathy was manifested to the business entrusted them. The great fear of the white citizens seems to be, that the Southern patronage to the Stephenson House will be withdrawn, should attempts be promptly punished by the authorities. Hence the action of officials in letting the women off secretly, and the threats to arrest the colored people for mob violence. Such proceedings on the part of those claiming to be administrators of justice, whether intended or not, should call forth the condemnation of all honest men; their plain truckling to the spirit of oppression is calculated to invoke, as it did on that occasion, the most bitter feelings. There is a way to reach such officials, the people know it, and we trust they will see to walking in it.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Mr. Editor—Sir:—Laying aside a few matters of considerable interest, I desire in this communication to notice a paragraph in an article from the pen of 'A Spectator,' of Villa Nova, which appeared in the Freeman, of June 30th. In that article, after one or two finished and very gentlemanly compliments, I am accused, among the rest, of being possessed of a poetic turn of mind.

Now, it is my opinion that merited compliments and tributes should be duly appreciated, but whether these are the rewards of merit, I feel that it is not for me to say; all that I can say, is, that while under mental discipline, a very few years ago, my mind often proved truant to its tasks, and arose in sublime contemplation of thoughts and objects, which led me to the partial supposition that such might be the case; but having long since been brought to my wits, and a contrary conclusion, by the rude handlings of the rough world, nearly all of such ebullitions of the mind have been compelled to fall into the back ground; and reluctance would hardly have allowed me to acknowledge that the proclivities of "A Spectator" could savor so much of the X. Y. Z., as to lead him to a clandestine attempt at the revival or insertion of that belief into my cranium again.

He is clearly understood, and in the way of diversion, I submit the following:

In attending to some items of business, during the past week, I spent the night at a village near this place, known by the name of Holland Landing. I quit my comfortable lodgings very early the next morning, in order to secure the pleasures of that period of the day for my long walk. It had rained at a late hour of the night, and there was no dust to becloud one's path or otherwise render a morning walk disagreeable—the echoing forests and deep tangled thickets, on either side of my road, dripping with the pearly rain drops of the past night, wore an aspect of brilliant green, the richness of which was truly a feast for the eye; and the morning air, which ever now and then bore along the delicious fragrance of the various gums, peculiar to the trees of which the woods consist, relieved me of my drowsiness, and restored me to the perception of the opening splendor of the morning. In this mood I was walking at a lively gait over the grassy lawn, while the fluttering and cooing of the wild pigeons, in the branches of the hemlocks and pines around me, began to announce the peeps of "Old Sol," when a silent and pensively sliding stream of water crossed my path. I stopped abruptly, and looked abroad. Long matted swamp grass and tapering rushes lay spread out far beyond, on the opposite side of the stream, in one green broad bosom of expansive beauty, while to the right and left the view was lost in the distance of a similar scene. I stood in the enjoyment of beholding this grand display of nature, with the sun pointing at my shoulders, through the tops of the trees behind me, when my eye fell upon an enormous frog, which, apparently, had seated itself at the side of the stream, to catch a portion of those delights for which I felt so grateful. I immediately stepped back, and procured a large stone, and was just about to destroy the poor frog, when the following beautiful lines gently arrested my arm, which was raised for the purpose:

'I would not enter on my list of friends,
(Though grac'd with polish'd manners and fine sense,
Yet wanting sensibility,) the man
Who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.
An inadvertent step may crush a snail,
That crawls at evening in the public path;
But he that has humanity, forewarn'd,
Will tread aside, and let the reptile live.
The creeping vermin, loathsome to the sight,
And charg'd perhaps with venom, that intrudes
A visitor unwelcome into scenes
Sacred to neatness and repose, th' alcove,
The chamber, or refectory, may die.
A necessary act incurs no blame;
Not so, when held within their proper bounds,
And guiltless of offence they range the air,
Or take their pastime in the spacious field.
There they are privileged. And he that hunts
Or harms them there, is guilty of a wrong;
Disturbs th' economy of nature's realm,
Who, when she form'd, design'd them an abode.
The sum is this: if man's convenience, health,
Or safety interfere, his rights and claims
Are paramount, and must extinguish theirs.
Else they are all—the meanest things that are—
As free to live and to enjoy that life,
As God was free to form them at first;
Who, in his sovereign wisdom made them all.
Ye therefore, who love mercy, teach your sons
To love it too. The spring-time of our years
Is soon dishonour'd and defil'd in most,
By budding ills that ask a prudent hand
To check them. But alas! none sooner shoots,
If unrestrain'd, into luxuriant growth
Than cruelty, most dew'lish of them all.
Mercy to him that shows it, is the rule,
And righteous limitation of its acts,
By which heav'n moves in pard'ning guilty man;
And he that shows none, being ripe in years,
And conscious of the outrage he commits,
Shall seek it, and not find it, in his turn."

The stone fell almost unconsciously from my hand, and I passed on, leaving the noble fellow in his glory. So much for Cowper. May his lines have an effect equally as salutary upon the minds of others!

Lefroy, Sept. 6, 1855.

Arrest of an Impostor.

A young man called yesterday at the store of Mr. Pike, 294 Broadway, on a begging expedition, and by signs intimated that he was deaf and dumb, and presented a paper which represented his name to be John Sanders, and that he was from an asylum at Columbus, Ohio, and a deaf mute, and greatly in want. While one of the clerks was reading the paper, Sanders pocketed a pair of spectacles and made off with them, but was overtaken and arrested. He was taken before Justice Welsh, when, strange to say, his hearing and speech returned. The magistrate, not appearing to be much astonished at the miracle locked him up. He has for some days been practicing his games in the city.—N. Y. Herald, 4th.

By Telegraph.

Important News by the "Africa."

General Simpson and Pelissier report that the Russian attack on the Tchernaya was a deliberate attempt to raise the siege of Sebastopol.

Documents found upon a dead Russian general show that if they had succeeded in taking the heights, a further attack from four points was to have been made.

Simpson estimates the Russian force at 55,000 infantry, 6,000 cavalry and 160 guns. The French had only 12,000 men and 4 batteries engaged, and the Sardinians 4,500 men and 14 guns, while the English had only 1 battery.

The Russians carried the bridge and crowned the heights three times with great gallantry but where repulsed and the retreat was covered by Russian batteries.

Pelissier calls the French loss 14 officers killed, 53 wounded; 1756 men killed, 150 missing, 1,160 wounded. Sardinian loss 250.

The Russian loss was 3,000 killed, 8,000 wounded, and 1,800 prisoners.

General Simpson says the Redan and Malakoff were bombarded on the 17th with as much effect as was anticipated.

Gortschakoff telegraphs: Night of 27th—Affairs unchanged, but fire of the Allies occasionally very heavy.

It was reported that Gen. Simpson was sick, and that General Bentinck had assumed command.

The allies were preparing to cross the Tchernaya; active operations were delayed till this was effected.

Omar Pasha was to leave for Trebizund on the 21st, to take the chief command in Asia.

There is nothing reliable from Kars or Erzeroum.

The Russians had re-established communication between Genilschi and Arabat.

The Baltic fleet had retired from before Cronstadt. It was only the disabled gunboats that were returning home.

Private letters state that the Russian loss in Sweaborg was not less than 2,000 men, but others say that it was not more than 50 killed, and that the batteries were wholly uninjured.

A Prussian circular indicates that the position of that Government and the Germanic Confederations is precisely as it was a year ago.

In reply to Austrian remonstrances, England is understood to have stated that the question of nationalities should not be introduced in reference to the present depots for the station of recruits for the foreign legion should be removed further from the Austrian frontier.

The Irish potatoe crop on the whole was satisfactory.

The French news is unimportant. The crops were satisfactory.

In Belgium a commission had been appointed to revise the tariff and the same subject was under consideration in Spain.

A Paris rumor states that the involuntary abdication of Isabella of Spain may be looked for.

The export of Breadstuffs is prohibited from the Roman States.

Advices from India report a formidable insurrection among the Santais and other tribes in Bengal. The rebellious force was from 30,000 to 50,000 strong and was destroying everything European. There was no military in the neighborhood.

In China the insurgents were losing ground in the north.

Arrival of the "Arago."

New York, Sept. 11.

The Arago arrived at about half-past three o'clock, bringing 280 passengers, having left Havre on the 29th ult.

The papers offer but little news.

Queen Victoria returned to England on the 28th ult.

Pelissier telegraphs, under date August 27th, that on the previous night the French carried a Russian ambuscade in the glacis of the Malakoff. Subsequently, 500 Russians tried to retake it, but were repulsed with a loss of 200 men.

Napoleon, in a letter to Pelissier, thanking the army for the Tchernaya victories says, that if Sebastopol does not fall, he knows the Russian army cannot sustain the struggle in the Crimea the present winter.

Two frigates bombarded Port Baltic for several hours. Government ships and stores have been destroyed, and several forts by the cruisers.

The Russians are said to be doubling the garrison at Sebastopol.

The Russians had launched at Nicoleff seventeen Russian gun boats, and came out of Riga on the 10th, and fought for two hours with the British screw steamer Hawk, of 60 guns, and an 8 gun corvette. Result indecisive.

The Russian Reinforcements.

The German papers contain most horrible accounts of the wasting away of the Russians by disease. The army which Gortschakoff waits with breathless anxeity, is crawling over the steppes without a supply of water, whilst the heat is at thirty-four degrees, Reaumur. Sebastopol, though continually changing garrison, is known to be pestilental with disease. The affairs of the 17th and 18th cost the garrison of Sebastopol, according to German accounts, 12,000 men. Simpherepol and Nicolaieff are no longer able to receive the dying, and scores expire on their arrival at these fatal depots for want of assistance and shelter.

☞ Russia having failed in procuring a loan on the Continent of Europe is going to try the U. States. It is confidently stated at Washington that the Muscovite Ambassador is to get up a loan on the plan lately adopted in France; that is, by small loans from individuals. Now is the chance for Brother Johnathanowsky to prove his sympathy with his Imperial relatave. The Muscovite is evidently getting into a bad way, when he has to resort to a loan in America.

☞ The Toronto Globe says—"Mr. H. H. Date, of Galt, the tool manufacturer who has beaten the world, is not American, as the Yankee papers boast. He is a thorough John Bull."

Losses of Russia by the War.

A gentleman, long resident in the southern part of Russia, furnishes to Blackwood's Magazine a statement of the injury done to the agriculture of the empire by the war. He speaks particularly of one estate, upon which he resided for several years: "The estate in question consists of about 40,000 acres of land, with about thirteen hundred serfs. Its principal productions are linseed, corn and wool, which are all sold for exportation by way of the ports of the Azov and Black Seas. These two seas having been closed for some time, all the raw produce remains rotting on the hands of the producer, with the single exception of wool, which finds a ready market in Germany, being transported overland through Austria; still the price diminished sensibly last year, on account of the increased cost of transport. I will now proceed to state the details of the losses experienced last year upon this one property. The average income amounts to about £6,000, out of which £1,500 has to be paid as interest of the mortgage—for this, like most other estates, is mortgaged to the government. Last year there were about 1,500 quarters of linseed, which, sold on the spot, would fetch upon an average 16*s.* per quarter. Of this not a bushel has been sold; so on this article alone there is a loss of £1,200. The wheat grown was about the same quantity. The average price of wheat is 12*s.* per quarter, and now only a limited quantity can be sold at 8*s.*; but, supposing the whole to be sold at that price, the loss will still amount to £300. This, however, is not the case, and the loss is not less than £500 upon wheat. Last year the price of wool was, upon an average, 15 per cent. below the usual price; in some instances there was a loss of 20 and 25 per cent.; the quantity sold usually fetched about £1,400, so there was another loss of more than £200. Upon this same estate there are kept about eighteen thousand sheep, of which there are generally sold every year two thousand for their tallow and skins, at an average price of 7*s.* a head; now, on account of the difficulties of exporting tallow, the price is only 5*s.*, another £200 out of the pocket of the proprietor. It will be seen by the foregoing statement, that the income of the possessor of this one estate is diminished more than one third, by restrictions laid upon trade by the closing of the ports of the Azov and Black Seas; and as this may be taken as a good criterion of the whole southern part of Russia, the loss is consequently something enormous."

At the same time, the taxes imposed upon the owners of estates had greatly increased Earthquake at Santa Barbara.

Two distinct shocks of an earthquake were felt in this city, says the Santa Barbara Gazette, at about two o'clock p. m., yesterday. The vibration of the earth was from east to west, and for some moments caused considerable excitement among our citizens. Many left their houses apprehensive of a recurrence of the danger. The violence of the shock was sufficient to move the walls of the houses, throw down small articles, and for time being cuased a general consternation.

The Paris Exposition.

CANADIAN DEPARTMENT,
14, Rue de Cirque, Paris, Aug. 17, '55.

I have just learned that Mr. Geo. Cross, of Montreal, has been awarded with a silver medal for his cheese. Mr. R. Wade, of Port Hope, has also had a bronze medal awarded to him for his cheese.

In wheat, I regret to say, we are at last beaten by Van Dieman's Land; but it is only by the "skin of the teeth." We fought a brave battle, so much so that it is a pity we have not won it. We have, however, won a most distinguished position.

The great agricultural meeting, for the purpose of pointing out to His Royal Highness the Prince Napoleon, some of the best agricultural implements in the world, took place at Trappes, on the 14th inst., in a fine level field on the farm of M. Dailly, nearly close to the Homestead. The jurors of all the members of the agricultural colleges and societies, with scientific men of all nations, to the number of 3,500, were specially invited by cards. These, with the holders of exhibitors' and season tickets, were admitted into the space enclosed for the trials. Spectators from all parts of the world crowded round the enclosures, and during the day there was estimated to have been 10,000 persons present.—Niagara Mail.

It is said of one of the sufferers of the New Jersey Railroad accident, that as he lay beneath the trains parched with heat, a "hot liquid" came pouring down within reach of his mouth, and he sipped it eagerly. His physician has not yet deemed it advisable to inform him that the "hot liquid, which he drank was the blood of his fellow passengers, who were lying above him dead, crushed almost to a jelly.

An Item; Four at one Birth.

Dr. Weir, of this place, who officinted on the interesting occasion, informs us that Mrs John A. Smith, of the 4th Concession of Derham, on Thursday evening, 9th inst., was safely delivered of three boys and a girl. They lived only a few hours, but the mother is doing "as well as can be expected."—Ingersoll Chronicle.

House-Breaking.

We learn that the house of the Hon. Rob't Baldwin, of Spadina, was entered on the night of Monday, and a quantity of silver spoons and forks, with £20 in money, carried off. The plate was marked with the crests of the Baldwin and Russell families; the money was in bills. The police have been placed on the alert.

Look out for Burglars.

On Monday night, Cavanagh's Hotel, Suspension Bridge, was entered, and the cash box, contaning some $600 stolen therefrom. The thief entered at a side window, forced the lock of the desk in which the cash box was kept, and decamped. The bar tender heard a noise in the house, and awakened some of the boarders, and when search was made, the above theft was discovered.—Welland Reporter.

Never marry for a tortune. We overheard a poor unfortunate get the following sock-dologer, the other day, from his better half. 'You good-for-nothing fellow,' said she, 'what would you been had I not married you? Whose was the baking-knife, whose the pig-trough, whose the frying-pan, and iron-hooped bucket but mine when you married me."

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend---I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, rear of Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, in the rear of Smith's Grocery, King Street East; any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plagny pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a sys'ematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet, and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

THE CANADA

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT

CAPITAL $200,000.

HUGH C. BAKER, Esq., President.
JOHN YOUNG, Esq., Vice-President.

ASSURANCES may be effected in this Company on single or joint lives, or on the contingency of one life surviving another; for the whole term of life, or for a limited period; by a single payment, or a limited number of payments; or annual payments only ceasing at death; to secure a sum at any given age, or at death, should death occur before the attainment of that age. Endowments for children, immediate or deferred annuities, and generally any transaction codtingent on the value and duration of life, may be effected in this Company.

Among the advantages offered by this, the only Life Assurance Company ever established in British North America, may be enumerated moderate rates and small expenditures; local management and speedy settlement of claims; liberal conditions, especially in reference to lapsed policies.

Prospectuses, forms of proposal, and full information as to the prosperous condition of the Company, may be had from

SAMUEL S. MACDONELL,
Agent.

D. CHARLES A. COSGRAIN, for Sandwich and Windsor, Medical Referee.

CAUTION.

FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or Brush subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangementas colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT
Quebec, 28th April 1853

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16TH VIC. CAP. 85. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 13th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. And that the following Packages are to be exempt from payment of Duty, viz: Bales, Trusses, Cases covering Casks of Wines or Brandy in Wood, Cases and Casks containing Dry Goods, Hardware or Cutlery, Crates and Casks containing Glassware and Earthenware, Cases containing Bottled Wine or Bottled Spirits, and all other packages in which the goods are not usually exposed for sale, or which do not necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold.

By Command,

F. HINCKS, Inspector Gen.

Information Wanted

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. If she will call on or communicate by letter with Robert Phillips, Centre St., Toronto, she will hear news of much importance relating to her property.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published, and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

BY S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press, and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid [illegible] which inevitably arises from [illegible] mankind in a [illegible] and [illegible] by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a [illegible] licity of objects. On the contrary, [illegible] clear and distinct [illegible] instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work [illegible] tion and interest of continuous narrative. Nor is the advantage of the plan is, that it not [illegible] but invites descriptive details, [illegible] personal adventures and [illegible] er, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the history, but to impart the colors of truth and [illegible] the pictures he may present.

[illegible] presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks [illegible] tical results of philosophy [illegible] finally, that while justice [illegible] sie ages, the whole world [illegible] modern civilization [illegible] ever, prefers [illegible] tian, rather than the soldier [illegible] of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially for [illegible], an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a Cyclopedia of History, and Universal Gazetteer, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1851.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed at reasonable length [illegible] and political [illegible] the antediluvian [illegible] earth [illegible] America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation for students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and there ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It is a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

ICE! ICE!! ICE!!!

THE Undersigned begs to return his best thanks to his Customers, for the liberal patronage he has received for the last nine years and to announce that he has enlarged and added to the number of his ICE HOUSES, having now four, which are filled with pure and wholesome Spring Water Ice, from Yorkville [illegible] pared to supply the same to Customers [illegible] tract or otherwise, during the season [illegible] from the 1st of June next. The Ice will be conveyed by waggon daily, to places within six miles of Toronto.

All orders sent to THOS. F. CARY, Hairdresser, Front Street, two doors from Church Street, will be punctually attended to.

Poetry.

From the London Spectator

THE SONG OF THE RAIN.

Lo! the long slender spears, how they quiver and flash,
Where the clouds send their cavalry down;
Rank and file by the million the rain-lances dash
Over mountain and river and town;
Thick the battle-drops fall—but they drip not in blood;
The trophy to war is the green fresh bud:
Oh, the rain, the plentiful rain!

The pastures lie baked, and the furrow is bare,
The wells they yawn empty and dry;
But a rushing of waters is heard in the air,
And a rainbow leaps out in the sky.
Hark! the heavy drops pelting the sycamore leaves,
How they wash the wide pavement, and sweep from the eaves!
Oh, the rain, the plentiful rain!

See, the weaver thrown wide his one-swinging pane,
The kind drops dance in on the floor;
And his wife brings her flower-pots to drink the sweet rain,
On the step by her half-opened door:
At the tune on the sky-light, far over his head,
Smiles their poor crippled lad on his hospital bed.
Oh, the rain, the plentiful rain!

And away, far from men, where the high mountains tower,
The little green mosses rejoice,
And the bud-beaded heather nods to the shower,
And the hill-torrents lift up their voice:
And the pools in the hollows mimic the fight
Of the rain, as their thousand points dart up in light:
Oh, the rain, the plentiful rain!

And deep in the fir-wood below, near the plain,
A single thrush pipes full and sweet;
How days of clear shining will come after rain,
Waving meadows, and thick-growing wheat:
So the voice of Hope sings, at the heart of our fears,
Of the harvest that springs from a great nation's tears:
Oh, the rain, the plentiful rain!

THE SLAVE'S DREAM.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

Beside the ungathered rice he lay,
His sickle in his hand;
His breast was bare, his matted hair
Was buried in the sand.
Again, in the mist and shadow of sleep,
He saw his native land.

While through the landscape of his dream,
The lordly Niger flowed;
Beneath the palm-trees on the plain,
Once more, a king, he strode:
And heard the tinkling caravans
Descend the mountain road.

He saw once more his dark-eyed queen
Among her children stand;
They clasped his neck, they kissed his cheeks
They held him by the hand—
A tear burst from the sleeper's lids,
And fell upon the sand.

And then at furious speed he rode
Along the Niger's bank;
His bridle-reins were golden chains,
And with a martial clank,
At each leap he could feel his scabbard of steel
Smiting his stallion's flank.

Before him, like a blood-red flag,
The bright flamingoes flew,
From morn till night he followed their flight,
O'er the plains where the tamarind grew,
Till he saw the roofs of the Caffre huts,
And the ocean rose to view.

At night he heard the lion roar,
And the hyena scream;
And the river horse, as he crushed the reeds,
Beside some hidden stream;
And it passed, like a glorious roll of drums,
Through the triumphs of his dream.

The forests with their myriad tongues,
Shouted of liberty,
And the blast of the desert cried aloud,
With a voice so loud and free,
That he started in his sleep and smiled
At their tempestuous glee.

He did not feel the driver's whip,
Nor the burning heat of the day—
Death had illumed the land of sleep,
And his lifeless body lay
A worn-out fetter, that the soul
Had broken and thrown away.

☞ "Mister, where's your house?" asked a curious traveller of a half horse, half alligator squatter. "House, eh? D'ye think I'm one of them sort, stranger? I sleeps in the prairie—I eats raw buffalo, and drinks out of the Mississippi!"

Miscellaneous.

The Two Bridals

A few years ago I made one of the seventy nine passengers on board the Emily Barton, bound up the Tennessee. A pleasant intelligent, go-ahead captain, a good steward, a social, refined company, made the trip one of pleasure; indeed, long shall I remember the same Emily Barton and her supurb living freight. One lovely summer afternoon, it was whispered that we were to have a wedding before the boat reached her destination; said whisper starting first and low near the stern somewhere in the vicinity of the ladies' cabin, and speedily making its way to the hall, the boiler deck and even to the main; like the snowball down the mountain, gathering size, form, and momentum, as it rolled forward, until the principals were not only pointed out but the parson—some scraps of the history of each, fiction, fact, and surmise, all hashed up ingeniously, leaving you in the half-pleasant, half-painful suspence and doubt that opens the eyes wide, and strains the drum of the ear so tight to all transpiring around you. Well, we landed to wood at a magnificent beech bottom, the tall, heavily leaved trees, with their silver gray trunks making a deep cool shade, while they, with the grassy green bank that bore them, were imaged in the glassy river, so clear, so true that intervision only pointed the ideal from the real. Cutting this charming spot in twain came a murmuring crystal spring brook scarce four spans wide, to lose itself in the mass of the Tennessee waters, they in turn to be alike lost in the boundless sea.

No sooner was the staging out, than there emerged from the ladies' cabin a fine manly looking fellow, dressed in faultless taste, intellect beaming in every feature, while over his face perfect happiness shone like phosphorus on the sea. Leaning on his arm was the most lovable woman it has ever been our lot to behold, her fine hazel eyes, (telltales that they were,) speaking deep emotion, and her expressive lip, quivering with suppressed excitement, while her dress, step and grace were those of a queen. "There they are!" "That's she!" "Oh, how handsome!" burst from many a lip as we instinctively made way to let them pass to the altar, and where that was we had about as clear an idea as a transcendentalist generally has of what he is talking about. But one thing we all seemed to know, that there was fun ahead, and to follow in their wake was the way to see it. As the ladies passed, an arm was offered to each, and thus we marched out of the cabin, down the stairs, across the stairing, and up the sloping bank. Some fifty yards up the brook the pair stopped, and joining hands they stood with the clear water between them—bridged as it was by the winding figures, and crossed by the stream of love as pure as itself. All was silent—still—until broken by the minister reading in an impressive manner, "And of the rib which the Lord God had taken from man made he woman and brought her to the man. And Adam said, this is now bone of my bone and flesh of flesh, she shall be called woman because she was taken out of man. Therefore shall a man leave his father and mother and cleave unto his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." He closed the book and offered a most touching and beautiful prayer; not a heart but seemed to feel that earnest appeal to the throne of grace. Then asking the usual questions he pronounced them husband and wife. The bride slowly sinking on her knees raised her beautiful face all covered with tears, and her clasped hands, and in a touching sweet voice, tremulous with deep emotion said:—"And now, O merciful Father, grant that our two lives thus united, may peacefully flow in one, even as this rivulet, until we reach the river of death, and undivided in faith and conduct, be permitted to enjoy thine eternal smiles in the land of the pure and blessed." Every pulse seemed stilled, hoping, wishing, for more of this beautiful drama. Not a word, not a movement from all, all was happiness. O, lovely panorama, how thou art graven on this heart! The happy man was in the act of imprinting a kiss upon the smiling lips of his magnificent bride, when the clear tones of a manly voice startled all from their pleasant reverie; the universal gaze rested upon a tall, handsome Tennessean, whose eagle eye spoke the man—a fit representative of a state where sleeps a Jackson.

"I can't stand this any longer. I can't—Pardon, ladies, pardon, I have a proposition to make on the honor of a man that never lies or trifles. I must make it or die—so here goes. Now I'll marry on this spot, any lady who has the nerve to face such music; look at me, and if you can love me as she loves," (pointing to the bride,) "I'll promise to be a husband as a true hearted man will make to the woman that comes trembling under his wing. I further say, that no spot or shame attaches to my name or ever shall; and this arm will support and protect the one who can trust it. Who will take it?" and his eye ran slowly over the crowd of handsome woman around him.

His earnest manner and novel speech had aroused an intense feeling; all was surprise, and deep sympathy with the fearless, excited orator, when a fawn-like, blew-eyed girl, from the flowery banks of Alabama, stepped to his side, and looking confidently up in his eyes with her hands on his arms, said, "I am thine." By this time his arms were around her waist, and parting her curls, black as the raven's wing at midnight, looked stedfastly in her face for a moment, and signed the contract with a kiss which all the married ladies pronounced genuine—perfectly satisfactory. Raising his flashing eyes with a triumphant expression from the pleasant task just mentioned, he said:—"Where is that parson? send him right here—on this spot we will be made one. I never let such luck as this pass me by waiting a minute—so go ahead," and on that spot where they first met were they solemnly united forever. When the words—"What God hath joined together let no man put asunder," a shout went up that awoke the echoes for a mile; every hand was extended to the happy, lucky, venturesome fellow, and every young lady in that crowd pressed the lip of his young and handsome wife. For a moment I wished I were her, but I instantly recovered myself and pushed in weakness from me; woman kissing always seemed a waste of sweetness to me, but they know best. Laughing, shouting, happy, we all returned on board. Our generous captain set a splendid supper; the clerk made out two certificates—they were signed by the captain and seventy-four witnesses (five more make nine, you know, men and woman all told;) everybody signed it.

Then we danced, we laughed, we made children of ourselves—yes, made fools of ourselves. Be that as it may, when the watch changed at the noon of night, the bluffs on the dark shores of the river returned only an unbroken echo of the hoarse coughing of the Emily Barton's engines, and in our dreams we vainly endeavored to vie with the lovely reality of the evening.

Remarkable feat of a Sailor.

There is a story that a sailor has volunteered to start from Careening Bay on the first favourable opportunity, and, single handed, to destroy each ship successively. He asserts that he is in possession of a secret method by which he can move along beneath the surface of the water and breathe as easily as if he were in a diving apparatus supplied with air by a pump, and that he can carry with him an explosive machine of sufficient power to drive a hole through the bottom of the largest ship. All this may end in smoke, as so many other assertions of possessing secret powers of destruction appear to have ended. A few afternoons since a small skiff, fitted at its sides with what appeared to be not unlike a life boat apparatus, was carried down by the French towards Careening Bay, and perhaps this gave some coloring of truth to the story. Besides, the sailor gave a proof on the night of the 19th instant, that at any rate he was clever enough to approach a ship undetected, notwithstanding a very careful guard being established to mark his coming. As a proof of still further ability, he announced to the officers of her Majesty's ship London, that he would come in the course of that night and chalk up the name of the ship on her side, just above the water-mark, do what they might to prevent him. The challenge was accepted, double senteries were posted, and some volunteers among the officers kept a look out, but no one was observed to come near, and all on board were convinced that no one had come near the vessel. Daylight, however, showed the letters conspicuously chalked on the ship's side, as the sailor said they would be. It has been suggested that the means by which his feat was accomplished was an atmospheric boat, capable of being guided when sunk beneath the surface of the water, and supplied by a reserve of air enough to last a given time for the support of its adventurous owner. It is stated that he could not have swam along side without being observed.—Lindsay Advocate.

Railway from France to England.

M. Favre, a French engineer, has just published some observations relative to the possibility of making a railway under the channel from France to England. The length of the work, he says, would be 30 kilometres (18¾ English miles,) and pierced at such a depth as to always leave twenty-five metres at least between the arch and the bottom of the sea. The tunnel he proposes to have lined with a double archway, one of bricks and the other of iron, this latter, pierced with narrow openings, to at once allow the slightest infiltration to be perceived. Referring to the repeated in breaks of water in making the tunnel under the Thames, M. Favre states that nothing of the kind can be apprehended in attempting the tunnel under the Channel, as for the greater part of the distance the ground consists of hard rock, whereas as the soil under the Thames was a blue clay of no consistence.

On the coast of Cornwall, he observes, a great number of mines extend several kilometres under the sea, and yet no accident occurs from an irruption of the sea, although the distance between the water and the workmen is so slight that the noise of the loose stones moved about by the waves can be distinctly heard. As to the possibility of piercing a tunnel of such length without issues from above to admit air, M. Favre declares the practicability of such a step to have been demonstrated by M. Mauss, an engineer in the service of the Sardinian Government, who has offered to undertake the piercing of a tunnel through the Alps of a length of thirteen kilometres (8⅛ English miles) without any opening from above. Many able engineers, M. Fevre declares, have shown the possibility of establishing a series of railways under Paris, of twenty-eight kilometres (17½ English miles) in length.

As to the expense of tunnelling, M. Favre admits that it is not very easy to estimate the cost with accuracy, so much depending in such cases on the nature of the ground to be cut through. The tunnel of the Credo, of four kilometres (2½ English miles,) on the Lyons and Geneva line, has been adjudicated to a company, for 7,252,000 fr.; and that of St. Irene, of somewhat more than 2,100 metres, on the Marseilles line, for 4,429,800 fr., which is, he says, about two millions per kilom. The tunnel of twenty-eight kilom. under Paris, is estimated, he remarks, at sixty-four millions. Engineers are at present, M. Favre states, in conclusion, engaged in estimating as accurately as can well be done, the utmost cost of the execution of a tunnel under the Channel between England and France, and in order to avoid all disappointment to the shareholders who might think fit to take part in the enterprise, the works would be executed at a fixed price, by contractors offering every guarantee of responsibility. Such is M. Favre's plan, which whatever may be thought of its feasibility, certainly is not wanting in boldness.

Golden Words.

The Money article, in the last Independent commences with the following just and timely remarks:

The simple truth uttered by Dr. Franklin that "the road to wealth is as strait as the road to market," is often made a text among wise men in their secular teachings and speculations—some doubting or disbelieving the statement altogether, while others pronounce it worthy of all faith and confidence. Had Dr. Franklin lived at the present day he would doubtless have had different views on the subject, and also expressed himself differently. He would have said, probably, that the road to wealth is as crooked as the path to the white mountains. With such financial teachers in Wall street and State street as Schuyler and Tuckerman, much new light has broken upon the present generation. Our young men are not taught in this progressive age that honesty is the best policy—or that, in value, "a good name is above riches." To be shrewd, keen, smart—to be able to dodge here, out-wit everybody there, and get the start of a neighbor yonder, is now the grand platform on which a majority of business men plant themselves, With a large capital stock of such talent, success, it is said, is sure. Trading now is not confined to bales and boxes, to Indian corn, white beans, etc, as in former days, but men trade in politics and trade in religion, trade for cash, trade for peace and trade for war, trade to kill and trade to cure, trade with one eye to the North and the other to the South, and last of all they will trade to save the Union, (and always get cheated.) Speculation is the order of the day. Steady, moderate gains are quite unfashionable. Business men train themselves to make a hundred thousand a year, just as a horse is trained to run a mile in 2.40—by practice. Old-fashioned Puritan notions, such as integrity, sobriety, benevolence, real goodness—are at a discount, compared with other more practical qualities so called. They are very good in their place, (on Sunday,) but not on the whole very well adapted to commercial every-day life.

When shall there be a change? when shall men cease to sell themselves, soul and body, for money? When shall they be taught, by precept and by example, the real value of moral principle? A change must take place or we shall, as a nation, fast go to destruction. There must be a change in the press—newspapers must scatter light and not darkness. There must be a change in the pulpit,—ministers must no longer teach that we must obey all wicked (in)-human inactments, refuse to obey God, and have no conscience. We have been going on the wrong track. It is time to "switch off" and turn about.

Let Christian men henceforth stand firm, as "living epistles, known and read of all men," looking with pity, horror and contempt upon those who point out any other "road to wealth" than that paved with the ROCK OF ETERNAL RECTITUDE.

Worth Knowing.

One pound of green copperas (cost seven cents) dissolved in one quart of water and poured down a privy, will effectually concentrate and destroy the foulest smells. For water-closets on board ships and steamboats, about hotels and other places, there is nothing so nice to cleanse and purify those places, as simple green copperas, dissolved; and for sick rooms, it may be placed under the bed in any thing which will hold water, and thus render an hospital or other places of the sick free from unpleasant smells. For butchers stalls, fish-markets, slaughter-houses, sinks, and wherever there are putrid and offensive gases, dissolve copperas and sprinkle it about, and in a few days the "bad smell" will pass away. If a cat, rat, or mouse dies about the house and sends forth an offensive gas, place some dissolved copperas in a cup or jar, anywhere within "smelling distance," and the cure is sure. I have known a stock of dry goods which were nearly spoiled by a "skunk" under a store, to be cleaned and restored simply by sprinkling dissolved copperas about the floor.—Salem Gazette.

Amusing.

The Public Ledger informs us that a Mr. James A. Boone, who has volunteered his services as a nurse to go to Norfolk, is "an Englishman by birth," but "has been in this country seven or eight years, and is thoroughly republican in his views and feelings." The idea of inquiring into the nativity and republicanism of a volunteer nurse, had never suggested itself to us before. We think, if we were suffering with yellow fever, and could not get anybody else to nurse us, we would submit to the attendance even of the most faithful and loyal of Queen Victoria's subjects.

Thick and Thin.

We cut the following from the Presbyterian of the West. It will apply to preachers of more than one denomination in the West:—

A correspondent wishes the editor's help in procuring a suitable minister for "a destitute field, where great good may be done." There are three churches within a circuit of thirty miles, which are able to give a salary of "three hundred dollars a year." "A man is wanted," says our freind, "who can go through thick and thin." By "thick," we presume, is meant the field of labour, and by "thin," doubtless, the proposed compensation on which he is to subsist. Vacant ministers will please take notice.

Wanted.

A fifer and a drummer to beat time for the march of intellect; a pair of snuffers for the light of other days; a stone cutter who can drill deep enough to blast the rock of ages; a ring that will fit the finger of scorn; a loose pully to work the shaft of envy; and a new cushion for the seat of government.

Judge Kane in the Rural Districts.

The Evening Post relates that Judge Kane went, some days since, to Media, the capital of Delaware county, where, on alighting from the cars, he asked a person, standing near, if he knew where Mr. M—— lived.

"Yes, sir, I am going directly by his residence." "Well, will you be good enough to inform him that Judge Kane wishes to see him?"

"Judge Kane! Are you Judge Kane?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, sir, I advise you to be a little careful how you move about here; you are not in very good repute in these parts. If you don't keep a good look out, they'll mob you."

After some further colloquy, the man agreed to inform Mr. M—— that Judge Kane wished to see him, and did so. Mr. M—— promptly replied:

"Judge Kane! I don't want to see him. What in the devil does he want with me?"

☞ A gentleman, cooper by trade, a negro, who owns a fine farm in Ohio and wished to purchase stave timber. Our colored friend inquired for what purpose he wanted it. He answered, "I have a contract to make some Whiskey barrels."—"Well, sir," was the prompt reply, "I have timber for sale, and want the money very much, but no man shall purchase a single stave or hoop pole, or a particle of grain of me for that purpose." Of course Mr. Cooper was not a little up "in the back" to meet such a very stern reproach, and so got mad and called him a "nigger." "That is very true, mildly replied the other. "It is my misfortune to be a negro; I can't help that, but I can help selling my timber to make whiskey barrels, and I mean to do it."

A Colored Patriot.

The Richmond (Va.) Enquirer advocates the erection of a monument to the memory of Peter Francisco, a colored man, born a slave in Virginia, but emancipated at the commencement of the Revolution, and enlisted as a soldier. He served all through the war, and was subsequently Sergeant-at-arms of the Virginia Legislature.

☞ In 1780, seven years before the Constitution of the United States was formed, Massachusetts abolished slavery entirely; Pennsylvania prospectively, the same year; New Hampshire totally, a year or two after; and Connecticut and Rhode Island prospectively, in 1784, making five States which were free from three to seven years before the United States Constitution was formed; and from five to nine before the goverment was organized. If it be said that the Union was formed in 1774 or 1777, we reply, it was not the Union, it was not THIS Union. It was an alliance of independent States, which recognised no slave representation, and no right, no obligation to pursue or surrender a fugitive slave.

From the Niagara Mail.

Colonial Union.

The Hon. Joseph Howe of Nova Scotia, lately published in England, a speech made by him in favor of the union of the N. A Colonies and their representation by delegates in the Imperial Parliament. This speech treats in a philosophical and statesmanlike manner, a question which must some day or other have a solution. A question which has engaged the attention of many deep thinking men both in Britain and the Colonies.

The conclusions reached by Mr. Howe on this subject are substantially the same as were approved of by Adam Smith and Benjamin Franklin, previous to the American Revolution, when a precisely similar question was forced upon the British Empire for consideration, and which if it had been decided according to the wise counsels of these two statesmen and philosophers, would have prevented the shock of that revolution, with all its subsequent and present hatreds and antaganisms.

We are not going to copy this speech of Mr. Howe's, we only mean to express our regret that Mr. Hincks now in England, should have thought fit to issue a reply to Mr. Howe, marked with much acrimony, denying the necessity or advantage of any union of the Colonies, or of their representation in any shape in the Imperial Legislature. We have read Mr. Hincks's "reply" without finding one satisfactory answer in it to the opinions expressed by Mr. Howe, but with a strong conviction, that the old well-known quarrel between Mr. Hincks and Mr. Howe, that arose out of the Grand Trunk Railway question has much more to do with this "reply," than the ostensible cause of dispute. For with all our respect for Mr. Hincks' abilities, we must ever condemn his breach with the Imperial Government respecting the building of that line of Railway.

Mr. Hincks enlarges on the Grand Trunk question—a thing which he had best let alone. Nobody has forgotten that but for his sudden rejection of the terms and conditions that had been agreed upon between the Provinces and the Imperial Government, the amount of money required for the construction of the Grand Trunk Railway, would have been obtained under the imperial guarantee at 3½ per cent interest—and the whole Road would have been completed from Sarnia to Halifax, as we know—at less cost to the country than one half of the distance will be built for, by Messrs. Jackson, Peto & Co. Mr. Hincks may well feel dissatisfied at the result of his preference of Messrs. Jackson & Co., to the British guarantee of five millions at 3½ per cent. But this ought not to bias his judgment against a great national measure for no other reason than that Mr. Howe his antagonist on his railway policy, is the principle advocate of it. We hope such is not the fact, but from the temper he displays towards Mr. Howe, one suspects such to be the case.

Some of our contemporaries who were always waiting for a cue, before they have an opinion to express, carried away by Mr. Hincks's statements, make fanciful objections to propositions which Mr. Howe never thought of advancing. Such a question as that of a union of the Colonies, is not one fit to be treated with pragmatical stupidity. One of our contemporaries treats the matter thus—

"It is nothing less than a claim to be equally taxed with the English people in order to have a voice in their legislature, and a greater participation in imperial emoluments, &c. We are, forsooth, in lieu of our present general taxation—one penny of which does not go to paying for the protection of British arms—to take upon ourselves the burden of the income and property tax, national debt, and what not. We are to insist upon paying off some of the expenses of a new war, and more of the liabilities of the old ones. We are to send representatives to England when Parliament opens and the Atlantic is still. And we are to reciprocate patronage by sending Canucks to fill official berths in return for fresh imported Cockneys who will look after the squatting system"

Such gabble may suit geese; but thinking people like to hear common sense. Mr. Howe's proposition as regards Imperial representation, is simply to have a few, say half a dozen delegates of the N. A. Colonies in Parliament, either with the right to vote or without it, just as the delegates of the American Territories sit in Congress. If with the right to vote, then the Colonies to be subject to a small stated tax in return for the general protection of the Province by the Imperial Government. If without the right to vote; then the representation to be attended by no pecuniary contribution.

Representation and taxation will go together certainly; but only in proportion to their respective extent. When Scotland became united to England, the smallness of her representation in the United Parliament was compensated by her comparative exemption forms many of the taxes imposed on England, such as the land tax, &c. The same occurred on Ireland's union, and the same principle will rule here. The arrangement of these points form matter of detail which ought not to be very hard to be settled by men of understanding.

We question much if the whole amount which would be required of Canada to be paid towards the general defence of the Empire, in case of the admission of Provincial delegates into Parliament, would equal the sum we are now necessitated to expend on our new militia system in consequence of the partial withdrawal of the Imperial troops. It is neither fair nor reasonable in us to expect the heavily taxed people of Great Britain to be at all the expense of the future protection of the Provinces. None but ninnies or knaves would desire to live wholly upon their relations. Mr. Howe proposes a preventative.

Kane, the Murderer.

Martha Hanway, wife of Castner Hanway, who was imprisoned under the charge of Judge Kane, for treason, is dead. The A. S. Standard says her health received a severe shock at the time of the incarceration of her husband, from which she never recovered.

And Judge Kane is now repeating this murderous process—slaying by inches worthy and amiable matrons in Pennsylvania, that North Carolina mothers may be scourged, prostituted and sold at the pleasure of lustful, savage masters. Read the following item of news from the Philadelphia correspondent of the Standard:—

"Increased solicitude is felt for Mrs. Williamson, particularly on the part of her female friends. The "august martyrdom of maternity," which you know was for some time imminent, seems likely to be precipitated by her recent trials. Both her children are now sick, though the one who was most seriously ill is, I am happy to say, much better. The absence of her husband at this critical juncture is a trial to her, which requires all her fortitude to bear with calmness.

Williamson is sick and imprisoned—his wife and children are ill—but the Kane tyrant's despicable tool, not for one moment relents. Nor does servile Pennsylvania move to protect the liberties of her citizens, though Kane treads them under foot, without form of law, and bids scornful defiance to the Constitution of the State.

Such are the sacrifices which the infamous National Union demands. And yet priests and politicians, Republicans and Free Soilers sustain and laud it! It is accursed! So has justice decreed. Let all lovers of justice see to it that it falls.—Anti Slavery Bugle.

☞ Commenting upon this, the Free Presbyterian says:—

Thus the namesake, and the spiritual, if not lineal, descendant of the first murderer plies his work of death. Not by the stroke of the bludgeon, but by the slow tortures of damp dungeons with their foul air; by the chafling and goading of high, and noble, and sensative spirits, till their very lifeblood is distilled, drop by drop, that the ermined wolf may lap it as a sweet banquet.

'How long, oh Lord! how long?'

From the Independent.

The American Tract Society and Slavery.

To the Editor of the Whitby "Commonwealth."

SIR,—I think it due to the columns of your paper, as well as to myself, once more to direct attention to the "American Tract Society and Slavery." In the early numbers of this journal, two articles appeared over my signature, relative to the convention of colporteurs, &c., held in Rochester, in January last:—articles that were reprinted in New York State, and extensively circulated in Canada and elsewhere:—articles, the subject of animadversion in more than one periodical in this province, and to some strictures on which, three letters were written in reply and published in the Canadian Independent.

The articles referred to were incomplete, so far as intention was concerned; and I always purposed to add to them at a convenient season, giving such explanations and illustrations as the subject demanded. This I deferred for reason which I need not now give; but I was very soon visited with strictures by the editor of the Canadian Independent, when I deemed it right to state my views on the point discussed. Some of our readers have seen the strictures and the replies, but many have not. It is on this account that I think the subject ought to be referred to again in your pages, so that the writer may not be unnecessarily censured, and your columns may again be quoted by those who were so interested in the former communications.

Without troubling your readers with what has been written by your correspondent, or those who have criticised his letters, I may in a few words give you the pith and substance of the whole matter.

The two articles which appeared in the Commonwealth contained an account of the conversation referred to, and were written in a courteous, fraternal and laudatory strain. Still there was discrimination as to the operations of the American Tract Society, relative to slavery. The writer stated that he had not omitted to bear his testimony at the convention, as an anti-slavery man, and that he was in no way shackled by those around him in refusing to participate in the meeting in formation on this point. Everything appeared to be fair and honorable, and it was due to American brethren to mention the fact. He spoke freely, as an officer of the Anti-Slavery Society, and as a subject of the British province, and was treated respectfully and kindly. He was given to understand that the publications of the American Tract Society were anti-slavery, and had his attention directed by several to various parts of their publications. Relying on the testimony of Christian men, he gave expression to particulars on which those publications bear testimony, without however hinting that he was satisfied with the evidence, designing to say more on the subject at another time. The fact is, when he came to look into the documents, and to weigh the matter fully, he felt dissatisfied; he felt so when he wrote his articles; but he has felt more so since. The testimony is altogether inadequate. It is not such as christian men ought to bear. The sinfulness of slavery is not distinctly pointed out. There is the absence of manly decision, moral courage, and Christian rectitude in this matter. I respect and esteem numbers who are labouring in connection with this great society. The utility of the institution, must be admitted by all. There is much that is commendatory in what it has done; but, after all, it does not maintain its proper position in relation to the monstrous, aggravated, national sin—American Slavery.

The articles of your correspondent were considered by some too commendatory; and he was regarded as an "apologist" of the American society. Had his readers known what was passing in his mind, and what were his intentions, they would have modified their judgments—they would have seen that, while attempting to do justice to christian men as far as they went in a right direction, he indulged the hope they would soon attempt an advanced movement, and become more decided in their testimony on one great crying evil of their land. This they have not done, nor can they learn that they are likely to do so." He has no sympathy with rashness. He has aimed to avoid this in his discussions. Yet he has been censured by the rash, the impetuous, the fault-finding,—because he has not gone to the length to which their impulsive natures would prompt them.

Let all know, once and for all, that the writer is a British anti-slavery man; that he has no sympathy with it in any shape or any form; that he desires the freedom of every slave; and that he is willing, in his humble, sphere, to aid in the overthrow of slavery in all its varied forms and degrees. In his opinion, the American Tract Society are doing wrong, by their silence on the sinfulness of keeping men in bondage. I know there are difficulties in the way, but these may and ought to be surmounted. Were they to publish far and wide, one simple and expressive sentiment on the criminality of the system, numerous friends would flock around them, and their influence for good would be materially augmented. The sooner they change their policy, the better for themselves and the better for the world.

Yours, respectfully,
JAMES T. BYENE.

☞ Let the Colored people keep their eyes on the artful efforts of the Tract Society, among us, in Canada. They are our deadly foes.—[ED.

Colorphobia.

We were recently witness to the sifting process on the old West Chester Railroad, whereby the passengers are assorted out into lots according to the color they happen to have inherited. Colored persons are very carefully handed into a corner by themselves, unless they happen to be acting in the capacity of nurses or servants. This ought not to suprise us if existing in the South, or anywhere else in the world but in a region under Quaker influence like Chester County. To the credit of the Norristown Railroad Company, such a regulation has never obtained on any of its lines since its construction; and the Valley trains which run close to those above alluded to make no distinction on such a contemptibly silly basis. To the still further credit of our road they have never introduced the far more rational, yet unnecessary, classification of the passengers into No. 1 and No. 2 travellers; or high price and low fare seats. The Reading Railroad, however, that thus sorts its passengers on the basis of the rate of fare, can claim a better excuse for the practice than their West Chester contemporaries, for many white men and women like to enjoy alone the fumes of rum and tobacco. Indeed, tobacco smoking is the only kind of aristocratic distinction allowed on the Norristown Railroad.

While on this subject of colorphobia, we might further remark, to the credit of Norristown, that our new line of Omnibusses allows no exclusion of men and women because they are not white.—Norristown (Pa.) Olive Branch.

Horrible Murder.

About two o'clock this morning, officers Grant and Kearney, while on duty on Pacific street, between Battery and Sansome streets, discovered a man lying on the sidewalk opposite the Clinton House, apparently in the last agonics of death, and weltering in his blood. On examining the body it was found that he had received a knife wound in the neck, on the left side, severing the jugular vein, causing almost instant death; deceased lived about five minutes after he was discovered by the officers. The body was taken charge of by the Coroner. The body has been recognised as that of John S. McCarney, a native of Indiana, and about 22 years of age.

The police are on the track of the assassin, and it is to be hoped that they will succeed in capturing him, and the cowardly villian have meted out to him the full penalty of his murderous act.—Steamer State Jour. Sacramento, California.

From the Liberator.

Passmore Williamson.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has refused to grant the release of Passmore Williamson. Judge Lowrie concurred in the decision, although he differed from the others in some of the views of the case. Judge Knox dissented from the decision.

Judge Black read the decision; the ground taken is, that the Court has no jurisdiction to warrant its interfering with the judgment of the Federal Court; that such Courts have exclusive power in deciding cases of contempt, and this Court could not go behind the record to ascertain the fact whether the commitment was legal or not.

Judge Knox, in his adverse opinion, contended that the District Court had no jurisdiction to issue a warrant of habeas corpus in the first place, and that Williamson was guilty of no crime in refusing to answer it. He also urges that the power to issue a writ of habeas corpus is confined exclusively to the State Courts.

On reading the decision of the Court, it is apparent throughout that it is made in a partisan, pro-slavery spirit, akin to that manifested by Judge Kane, and therefore is undeserving of any consideration. How long is judicial tyranny, almost without a parallel, to be allowed to keep in prison one of the worthiest citizens of Pennsylvania, who is guiltless of wrong, and with 'a conscience void of offence toward God and toward man?' It ought to work an entire revolution in that State.

We are glad to see that, at the recent Republican State Convention held at Pittsburgh, (which was addressed, among others, by Judge Jessup, and by Messrs. John A. Brigham, Joshua R. Gibbings and L. D. Campbell, of Ohio,) it having been proposed to substitute the name of Henry M. Lloyd for that of Peter Martin, as candidate for the important office of Canal Commissioner—

Rev. Mr. Aaron, of Montgomery county, moved to amend by striking out Lloyd's name, and inserting that of Passmore Williamson. (Prolonged cheering.)

Mr. Aaron was called to the stand, and addressed the convention. His speech was one of great force and eloquence. In conclusion, he said, by the nomination of Passmore Williamson, the party would, please God, please themselves, and do good, and any further than that, he was no politician. (Applause.)

Mr. Fenn thought it would be impossible for Mr. Williamson to serve, he being in Moyamensing prison.

Voice—We will take him out!

Mr. Aaron—There ought to be a principle in the breasts of the men of Pennsylvania, which would make them march to Philadelphia with no arms but those the God of nature has given them, and tear down that prison, until not one stone would be left upon another!

This remark, uttered with much enthusiasm, threw the convention into a burst of excitement, and was responded to with cheers and prolonged approbation.

Some gentlemen suggested that Gov. Reeder's name be subscribed in place of Williamson. Decided out of order, as there were already two amendments.

Mr. Blakley, of Butler County, proposed the name of Hon. Charles C. Sullivan, of Butler. Ruled out of order.

Mr. Blakely moved that the whole business be laid on the table, and that the Convention proceed to nominate a candidate viva voce. Lost.

Mr. McClue moved to postpone for the present. Lost.

Loud cries for 'vote on Passmore Williamson!'

The amendment to the amendment, (substituting Williamson for Lloyd,) was carried amid immense excitement and loud cheering.

The amendment as amended was then adopted.

Dr. Gazam moved that Passmore Williamson be now unanimously nominated as the Republican Candidate for Canal Commissioner. Adopted.

Three deafening cheers were then given for Passmore Williamson.

NOTICE.

The Shareholders and Managers of the PROVINCIAL FREEMAN are requested to meet at Chatham, on the last Tuesday in October, without fail.

The Colored People and the Conservative Party.

Within the next five years, the colored men of the Counties of Kent & Essex, C.W., will have doubtless the balance of political power. They have it in several municipalities now. God be praised for it! May they have wisdom to use that power aright! My brethren, look around you, and mark well the demagogue. He has noted you as his prey. His plans are laid. This is quite clear from some things which have come to sight. It is really amusing to see and hear some of our long-face Reformers. O! how they love their colored friends! What evidence they have given of the fact! The greatest abundance, and no mistake! Why, you, brethren, have had as much proof of it, as you have that "Old Nick" is dead. You have had it, on the steamboat, when you and he sat together, at the dinner table. You have had it, in the Hotel, when you and he had a little "chit chat," in the parlor, where there were a few Southern nabobs. You have had it in the Stage Coach and Railway Cars, as you and he journied over plank roads, or fled on iron, through our envied country. You have had it, in the past municipal arrangements and "Common School" doings. And you had it, no doubt, to your heart's content, in the general Social circle of your friends—the Reformers. We do not mean to insult you! But you should not forget all this evidence of the Reformer's love for you and your interest. Shall we say, their profession of love for us, as a people, is hypocrisy? There are noble exceptions—but.....—our friends are the Conservatives.

We allow, it has been truly trying to us, to meet now and then a cold shoulder from certain Conservatives; but still the theory and practice of the party are such as to give us hope; and as a people, we could not lose sight of the fact, that the principles of Conservatives are loyal and true, and that with them, is inseparably connected our weal or woe. And besides, the party is a combination of such men and means, as will ultimately destroy those elements and influences among us, which are the legitimate off-springs of "Red Republicanism"—the worst enemy, in existence, to the colored race, and a general curse to society. Any government unsuited to the condition of the people, is a curse, and such, hitherto Republican governments have proved themselves to be, as their history abundantly attests. We do not mean principle abstractly considered, but concretely. The colored people should never lose the truth, that the Conservative party is composed, in the main, of materials, that are incapable of a general course of procedure, that will favour cast, because of complexional differences.

We say once for all, that the Conservative party is the Constitutional party of our much envied country—it is true to the general interest, and loyal to the Crown. It seeks the Union of the North American Colonies and a Representation in the Imperial Parliament—the means necessary to maintain pure allegiance to the Crown. Its principles are fixed in virtue, and must result in intelligence, freedom, and happiness.

☞ We have received a letter from the office of the Herald of Freedom, Cincinnati, Ohio, which informs us that a scheme is on foot, by a certain police officer of Nashville, Ten., to kidnap a woman named Sarah Lee, who was held as a slave, in Nashville, but who fled some time since to Canada for her freedom. It is understood that Sarah Lee is in Canada, and it is arranged to decoy her to the United States, where she will be instantly taken under the authority of the "Fugitive Slave Bill." Let her and others look out and keep from the States. The officer has his eyes also on other persons, in Canada, from Nashville, &c. They should be careful. Let the colored people both here and in the States, keep their eyes on the kidnapping villian, and slay him the first opportunity. A MAN STEALER, GOD'S WORD SAYS, SHALL BE PUT TO DEATH."

☞ We have heard several complaints of late, of not receiving the Freeman. We assure our friends, the fault is not in us The paper is properly and regularly mailed at Chatham. The fault is either in the Post-Master, or Post-Office arrangement. We know that there is miserable work done somewhere in the Department; for example, it is much easier to get a letter at Dresden, from Kingston, a distance of some 400 miles, than it is from Chatham, which is but 15 miles off. We always received the New York Weekly Tribune, before we do the Western Planet, at Dresden. We hope that the Postmaster-General will see to such an unbecoming arrangement. The "Coon" treed by Loyal George, did much better in his days of political glory!

Look out for Pickpockets.

One of our King Street Grocers, on the 21st inst., while quietly taking a snooze in his establishment, had a valuable gold lever watch extracted from his pocket. So much for sleeping in business hours, a practice too frequently indulged in by some of our business men.

☞ A New Haven paper, describing the localities of three prominent institutions of that city, says: "The Medical College is on the road to the cemetery, the Divinity College is on the road to the poor-house, and the Law School on the road to the jail!"

If the above, which we cut from the American Baptist, be true, there is but one reason for such decline in old and "prominent institutions," and that is the exaltation of REASON above REVELATION—or the recognition of Christ only as a man. May every such institution perish!

☞ Seventy slaves and free colored men were arrested while at worship on the first Sunday evening of July, in New Orleans, and sent to jail for making a noise. At the same time, theatrical exhibitions and cockfightings were allowed to go on unmolested.

We commend the above precious scrap to the Ministers and Churches of Canada who have so much sympathy and affection for their Southern brethren, whom, they believe to be true Christians, and rejoice to fellowship them. Will they continue to open not their mouth against such high-handed wickedness and terrible blasphemy? If any are disposed to say, you accuse us wrongfully, brother—we answer, do not forget Alexander Campbell, of Virginia!

A Bone for F. Douglass to Pick.

We cut the following from the Herald of Freedom, for the especial benefit of the ebon-gentry of the State of New York, in which "all men are free and equal." We ponder if the "white folks" who visit Saratoga Springs, will condescend to go to heaven and there drink from the same Fountain with Negroes?

Colored Gentlemen at Saratoga Springs.

A correspondent of the New York Herald gives a delicious account of the way the colored gentlemen are mixing in with their white brothers at Saratoga Springs. We are slow to see, however, how any serious complaint can be made about the matter—it is all a fair deduction from the promises which have been so industriously set down. Those of our Northern friends who have a distaste for such a condition of things had better be philosophical, see that it is what they have got to come to, and get used to it at once. We hope also the "many Southern gentlemen who have been forgetful of our own delightful places of summer resort, and who "are there at present," will have a sweet time of it.

For some time past there has been quite a time among the fashionables, in regard to liberties taken by the negroes of this place.

The rules of the Springs prohibit the blacks from using glasses used by the white folks. The negroes, as I am informed, are prompted, by some of the Seward stripe, that they have the same rights as the white folks. A few evenings ago, one of the "gammen" was handed out of the grounds. The same afternoon, a large building belonging to Clark & White was burned, for which the owners offered a reward of $200 for any information of the person who committed the deed. On yesterday there was quite a rough and tumble fight while Clarke & White's men were ejecting the negroes, and the greatest confusion prevailed. This morning about seven o'clock, the "niggers" from the different hotels mustered, and came down to the Congress Spring and mixed in with the Shanghaes. When they were told to disperse, they refused. A Mr. Sheppard, a lawyer of New York, pulled out a shooter and swore he would shoot the first "nigger" that would dare to attempt to drink out of the glasses. In a few minutes, Mr. Pike, a justice of the peace, arrived, whose presence settled the affair for the present. A disturbance is anticipated every day. There are a great many Southern gentlemen here at present."—Ga. Constitutionalist.

A YANKEE'S JAW-BREAKER.

We present with joy the following truthful and valuable paper, which we select from the Baptist, for the benefit of the misrepresenters of the English Government, as to her greatness and glory. We know it will be a real "jaw-bone breaker" to all Yankeedom. They fear England; hence their misrepresentation and abuse of her. We commend the article especially to the meagre, manless set of "Rebels" in Canada.

Such information respecting our adopted country, must afford peculiar satisfaction to Her Most Gracious Majesty's colored subjects, and particularly those in her North American Provinces. There is *no British*er more proud of our country's might and magnificence than ourselves—and no people ever lived, who appreciated their privileges under such a government more than do the colored people of this Province. And should Providence so order it, in the future, that, and our loyalty will be seen, as in the last rebellion.

It is England's love to God and man, that makes her what she is, and while she continues to make the Bible her Chart—she will fear God and respect the rights of man and defend the helpless and wronged, and hence must grow and flourish; and so may she do, until she conquers the world!

The Power of Great Britain.

We copy the following statements from the Providence Journal:

In viewing the operations of the present European war, there is nothing more remarkable as showing the vast resources and energies of Great Britain and France, than the facilities with which they are enabled to send their fleets and carry on their campaigns in different parts of the world at the same time. In fact, either of these great powers can do so without the other. Thus we see Great Britain, whose dominions almost encircle the globe, attacking her adversaries wherever there is a vulnerable point. The White Sea within the Arctic circle is blocked by her ships. In the Baltic she has a naval armament which, in its extent and completeness of equipment, surpasses any that ever floated, blockading every port of her enemy, and driving from it all its shipping. In the Black Sea she equally shows her wonderful strength, by annihilating the enemy's commerce and blockading her fleets within one of the strongest fortresses in the world, while her army aids in investing the place by land. The Sea of Azoff, with its towns and fortresses, almost within the heart of Russia, where a hostile fleet never ventured, is likewise controlled by her ships and armies. Again in an opposite direction, on the far distant coast of Kamschatka, where her enemy has raised a fortress, and where her ships find protection, England is probably at this very moment blockading it, or perhaps her flag already floats over it. The history of the world exhibits no parallel to her operations. We read of the vast operations of the Persian conquerors of old; of Sesostris and Rhamses, the Egyptians; of Alexander the Great; of the Roman Emperors; and, in later times, of those of Tamerlane and Genghis Khan. But these are insignificant when compared with the operations of Great Britain in our day. Even Napoleon the Great, with his conquering armies, was limited in his operations when compared with those now going on; and Rome herself, though her dominions stretched from the Euphrates to England, never exhibits half the power that England now does Connected with this subject, and not less worthy of notice, are the vast dominions of Great Britain, stretching over every continent, bordering every sea, and holding the strongest military and naval positions in the world. These she holds and governs while carrying on her gigantic war.

Leaving her own islands, she holds Gibralter, the key to the Mediterranean, with Malta and the Ionian Islands. In Africa are her settlements at Sierra Leone, the Cape of Good Hope, and the Islands of Mauritius. In Asia is Aden, at the enterance of the Red Sea, her possessions in India, embracing more than a hundred millions of souls; Ceylon, Singapore, Labuan and parts of Borneo, New Zealand and Australia. Coming westward, she holds the islands of St. Helena, Bermuda, Jamaica, and other West India Islands, with possessions in North America, larger than those in the United States; while in Central America she holds Baliza. On the South American continent her possessions are limited to British Guiana and the Falkland Islands. But will she stop here? We think not, as every few years adds a province in India, and the present war with Russia will doubtless add other provinces to her already vast dominions She has lost too many valuable lives and expended too much money in the present contest to be satisfied without checking the advance of Russia or placing barriers in her way. What the result will be none can foretell; but when this great drama shall have closed, it will be found that the map of Europe will exhibit more important changes than have taken place in it for the three previous centuries.

While England is thus exhibiting her strength in a contest with Russia, and governing her extended possessions with as much ease, apparently, as the petty German States rule their people, her commerce is not affected, but with gigantic strides she extends this element of her prosperity beyond that of every other nation. From the Statistical Journal we take the following particulars of her exports:

"From 1840 to 1853 the aggregate amount of British exports exceeded the national debt by nearly £100,000,000; the declared value of British and Irish exports having been £877,299,124, while during the same period the highest amount of the national debt was only £791,809,338 in in 1848.

In 1853 the exports amounted to nearly one hundred millions sterling, the amount having increased in fourteen years about 83 per cent. These exports were distributed to foreign countries and British possessions in the proportion of 66 to 34 per cent. respectively. The bulk of the foreign exports was principally to Europe and North and South America. Of the exports to British possessions, the East Indies took the largest portion until 1853, when the Australian exceeded the Indian exports."

The Dawn Convention—White and Colored Tyrants—Slaves in Canada—A Problem for our friends to solve—Henry Garret, of London, and General Cass, of Detroit—London, C.W. Meeting about the Dawn—A new Fever and how it will terminate—Mr. Dillon and Mr. Ward—Messrs. Clark and Gallego—The Women to work.

MR. EDITOR:—Allow me to say a few words to your readers, respecting the unheard of movements against our interests, which have transpired within the last few weeks.

The Dawn Convention organized on the ground of the Institution, on the 29th of August, but not within an enclosure. After repeated refusals by Mr. John Scoble to allow them to enter the School and meeting house, where they had been assembling for such purposes, for the last dozen years, and after a kind offer from Wm. Whipper, Esq., to use his Warehouse at Dresden, they adjourned to the Methodist Meeting House, nearer the Institute, and by the most beautiful harmony in their proceedings, were able to get through the election of six new Trustees, and the other business which brought them together. Not content with keeping them out, by means of a padlock, Messrs. Scoble, Henson, and one or two "inferior" men, followed to the place of meeting, and got up, as well as they could, little squads of their collecting; but so insulting was the language used, especially by Mr. Scoble, that it required the greatest amount of forbearance on the part of the men, who were their auditors. Dawn, for one day, at least, was something like a slave plantation. There, the "master man" (Scoble), declaring that he got his rights in England from the donors, not from the Trustees; that if he was dealing with wise men, he would know what to do; but as he was dealing with brutes, he would have to go to law; and otherwise expressing himself in obnoxious terms. To some parties, he said, if they would pay him seven thousand dollars, he would give up the Institution; that the colored men had received the benefit, when it was not for the colored people, but for Whites, Indians, and Colored; and that if he were to take an officer and search their premises, (meaning those that had lived thereon, and had had the management,) he could find plenty of the stolen property, thus implicating his very aids at the time of talking. He further stated, that if a deputation of such men as he could approve, were sent to him (not W. P. Newman, J. C. Brown, and T. Stringer,) he would open the house, and as he had the DECLARATION of Trust, and other papers he would give them certain information, but as they would not send him the deputation, and chose to hold a meeting without consulting him, he would not let them in, and would keep all the good news. You see, Sir, in the first place, the Declaration of Trust should have been in possession of J. C. Brown, but Mr. Scoble had managed to get it in his possession, although his name is not known in the instrument. To others he said, that he and his English friends, would give one thousand dollars towards the the buildings, and if a proper Committee was appointed, he would pay over to it seven thousand dollars also. I have said it was like a plantation; there were parties that in the south would be called "nigger drivers"—Josiah Henson, senior, and sons, and Nero Harding. Nero, and his lady, had their little squads here and there, and backed with energy all the master said, and some things he did not care to say. It was humiliating, Sir, to see those old men, Henson and Hardin, with feet tottering almost on the brink of the grave, running readily to do the dirty work of their white friend. Nero thought the property did not belong to any body, it was only trust—so Mr. Scoble had said at a meeting of colored people in Chatham. Josiah said at that meeting, and said on Friday evening, that every body was wrong, but "the strangers should be set right—Mr. Scoble did not lock the door, but the 'black' men did." Now, Sir, is not that like the South! He forgot the "black" men did not say they would unlock it, but Mr. Scoble did, that he could unlock it. To sum up, Sir, their course was most despotic, insulting, and reprehensible, and leaves us as much to fear from the high-handed conduct of such "friends" in Canada, as of even in the States and Canada. The tendency of it all is to degrade and shackle the colored people, and I am mistaken if they do not make the contest for the right, a warm one. I would like to ask our real friends in England and America, how long they intend to pay Mr. Scoble for such capers? (as he told us, in Chatham, he gets a "little pay,") and how long do they think he will be elevating us heathens, at this rate? It is an interesting problem this. If Mr. Scoble's abuse of the people of Dawn, and colored people generally, thoroughly convinces them, as it has done, of his tyrannical instincts, how long will such a course take to gain for him their confidence, and thus to enable him to complete their elevation? Just while on this point of the Dawn Institute farm, allow me to say, that from an extensive conversation with the people of the vicinity, I learn that the general opinion is, that if Mr. Scoble should be even so honest, he is not a proper person for the post he aspires to fill, because of the great aversion he does not hesitate to express of poor people, white and colored; poor whites seem to be beyond the pale of his regard. So whatever his private character may be his public acts and expressions are such as should induce philanthropists to inquire what they can hope to do by enabling him to remain here among the colored people at least.

It does seem, Mr. Editor, that just about this time in our history, the "Devil is loose." Now that we have the Dawn troubles, up rises another Saul among the prophets, in the person of one Henry Garret, of London, who glories in the prefix, Rev., though why his own acquaintance at home do not rightly know, he has conceived and proclaimed the idea of buying all the slaves in the States, he says. So, at the suggestion of and by advice from General Cass, of Detroit, who he thought proper to consult, he has come back to Canada to get the sanction of the colored people to this plan. Now, Sir, I have conversed with Mr. Garret, and am not alone in the conclusion, that he means to go begging, and so further degrade us. He certainly is not anti-slavery, although he whines most awfully about his dear brothers and sisters, in chains; prays and cries awfully, and loud, and long; at the same time, that he thinks it "stealing" the slave away from the master, to help those to their liberty who have all along had it stolen from them. Why will not this Garret go to work like a wise man, instead of trying to take such advantage of the ignorance of his people in Canada, at the instance of pro-slavery Divines in this country, and General Cass and other slaveocrats in the United States? But Garret wants to shake the Queen's hand, he tells us. Now, Sir, did presumption ever go farther. If men must go to England and the United States, to lie and beg, and so misrepresent the colored people, why tolerate such intellectual clod-hoppers, when clever men are on hand to do the mischief by rule?

On the 10th inst., a meeting was held at London, to hear the report of their delegate to Dawn, and on the evening of the 11th, another meeting to raise funds for the Committee. Important resolves were made. I will tell in my next a secret or two about these Londoners, that will surprise you; for the present, let it suffice to say, that there is a dangerous fever raging among the colored Know-Nothings there, that the sensible settlers, old and new, are ashamed of, and well they may be. How the Fairfield patients will get on, I am unable to say, but a stranger going into their town, would pronounce some of the colored people there, either hopelessly ignorant or very much deceived. I am pleased to assure you, however, that the respectable people there are above being the dupes of either of the prophets who so illumine the dark minds of the people—the compensation Cass advocate, and the forty hundred thousand man.

Mr. Dillon, as a public man, is still busy about London; he talks of taking Mr. Ward in hand, about his English operations—would like to know what he is doing, &c. Mr. Dillon also thinks the Provincial Freeman should not be supported—the colored people do not need a paper. He says, M. A. Shadd should not be connected with it, for she is an infidel. Mr. Dillon must have the right to make such grave charges, Mr. Editor, in his missionary wanderings among the benighted sons and daughters of color in and about London, do you not think! And how long will he be in evangelizing them at that rate? Should M. A. Shadd be an infidel, he knows she does not edit the Freeman. Much Mr. Dillon knows about the duties of a missionary to colored people in Canada, If that sort of walk and conversation is the best he has to bring to the work, he would do better in the army again, in my humble judgment,—what do you think? Is it not a pity, Sir, that brother Dillon and brother Scoble cannot have a little inquisition at their service? The latter, I remember, made a similar charge against "that Miss Shadd" to a Yankee Society once, and they cut off her "bread and cheese" for the same charge, not for the truth of it, for they had satisfactory evidence to the contrary; but unfortunately for him, it did not stay cut off. Now, provided the law would tolerate these missionaries in making such sweeping assertions, and provided they knew what they say, how will that help to 'elevate the colored people?' London is a great place, you think, by this time, and so is Dawn! What sort of a handling do you think Ward will get from Mr. Dillon? Messrs. Clark and Gallego may save Mr. Dillon the trouble of taking Mr. Ward in hand, for, according to them, Mr. Dillon is informed that Mr. Ward's "private" business does not touch his mission in London, but that Mr. Ward is collecting funds in England to help those fugitives who may go to the West Indies to work on the plantations—a something that really runs counter to the mission of Messrs. Clarke and Gallego, as they too want hands for the same country.

Now, Sir, do you not think by this time, that the Devil is loose? Hoping that your readers may excuse "these few lines," I must close for the present by an exhortation to all the women to help to raise funds for the purpose of getting possession of the Dawn Institute.

Boston City's Shame.

From the Auditor's report of the city expenses for the last financial year, just issued, we copy the following:

BURNS' CASE.—Extra expenses of maintaining the peace of the city during the trial and surrender of Anthony Burns, a fugitive slave from Virginia, $2727.60.'

The Plague Fly.

On Sunday morning, the fly know as the 'plague fly,' appeared in Norfolk. It is a flat insect, with black back and red belly, and has very large wings. In Portsmouth they were so thick in the streets as to annoy persons walking, and induced them to place a covering over their faces. The appearance of this fly is generally considered a good omen, as it is supposed to devour the malaria.

Burying the Dead.

The City Council of Norfolk have appointed a committee to superintend the digging of trenches at 'Potters Field,' in which to bury the dead, as the mortality is becoming too great to admit of burying them in the usual manner.

CIRCULAR.

The Book Committee of the African Methodist Episcopal Church Book Concern, have according to the authority given them by the last General Conference secured an act of incorporation from the State of Pennsylvania, by which the same has become a body politic in law.

The said Committee have agreed to celebrate that event in the city of Philadelphia, commencing on the third Tuesday in September, 1855, to continue for several days You are hereby most respectfully invited to be present on that occasion, and to take part in the exercises.

We request of every Minister having a charge, that he will take up a collection, as a free-will offering, on the occasion, for the benefit of the Concern, from the good people—which shall be called "The Lord's Free Will Offering, for the benefit of the General Book Concern of the African Methodist Episcopal Church;" and that he will attend the celebration and present the same, or else send it to us, to be presented in his name, and the name of his charge.

Yours, in behalf of the Committee of the African Methodist Episcopal Book Concern.

COMMITTEE:

A Canadian Legion.

The British Government have finally decided on raising a legion from among the sturdy population of the North American Colonies. The thing can be easily done if the right men are set about the business, and a reasonable good bounty be offered for recruits. The appointment of the Duke of Cambridge, the hero of Inkermann, to the command will be highly complimentary to the country. We find the following statement in reference to the subject from the London Morning Post.

From the London Morning Post.

"It gives us much satisfaction to announce that the failure of the attempts which have been made to raise a foreign Legion in British North America, has at length induced Her Majesty's Government to give a cordial response to the loyal offers of the Canadian people. It is intended to raise two battalions in Canada—a force consisting of two thousand eight hundred men. We believe that the regiment will bear the name of the "Royal British North American Regiment," and that the colonelcy in chief will be given to His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. The commissions will be conferred upon Canadian gentlemen, or officers settled in the province, and the corps therefore will be national. It will be composed of men of British and French orgin, and it will be a representative of the two great Powers who are now battling side by side in the Crimea. The numerical strength of such a corps is nothing in comparison with the moral effect which its embodiment will naturally produce. It is only due to the gallant gentleman who now so worthily fills the office of Prime Minister in Canada, to say that he has brought to a satisfactory termination the negotations with the Imperial Government on the subject, in spite of official routine and that vapid ignorance which hitherto have ignored the loyalty and devotion of the colonists of British North America."

Equinoctial Storm.

There was a tremendous gale from the North East with rain yesterday. We fear that many vessels will have suffered from its violence. The Propeller St. Lawrence, from Chicago, bound to Montreal, laden with wheat, was driven ashore about 9 o'clock a. m, at Niagara, just below Fort Mississaugua. Assistance was promptly rendered to the crew by the inhabitants, and by the Life Boat from Fort Niagara, which was put out to assist them, and they were all landed safely ashore. The vessel does not appear to be damaged, but is full of water. Niagara Mail.

Heartless Villiany.

We are again under the necessity of adding the perpetration of another robbery to the long list of burglaries which have been committed in this city within the past ten days, notwithstanding the vigilance of the police and, it is to be presumed, the increased watchfulness of housekeepers, which resulted from our frequent warnings. A brother and sister named Harris (both deaf and dumb) reside on Talbot Street, and through unwearied industry and sobriety they manage to earn a comfortable livelihood by tailoring. On Saturday night about 11 oclock one of the bedroom windows was forced open while they were asleep and their boxes were rifled of their contents. A purse containing $12 was taken away—the result of many months' frugality.—London Free Press.

The Submarine Cable.

The submarine cable lost off Nowfoundland, cost $75,000, delivered at Port au Basque, including insurance, freight, &c. It was fully insured in England. Forty miles had been paid out, and when it was cut the vessel was within twelve miles of St. Paul's. It is thought that a part, if not the whole of it may be recovered. Thirty four miles of cable were left on board the vessel, the weight of which was 190 tons.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend---I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, rear of Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, in the rear of Smith's Grocery, King Street East; any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot mutilders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—

Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

CAUTION.

FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangement as colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them.

Information Wanted

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. If she will call on or communicate by letter with Robert Phillips, Centre St., Toronto, she will hear news of much importance relating to her property.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the Southern Apostacy!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.
Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE
EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;
OR
UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, AN ENTIRE AND DISTINCT NARRATION IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF "PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD," "PETER PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY," "PARLEY'S TALES," &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has presented each nation separately. The advantages of this plan to a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, every thing is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in a new and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attractive charm of a well-told narrative. A great abundance of the book is filled with anecdotes, but brief notices of personal adventures of distinguished characters, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the history but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it shall be found to possess the practical results of profound investigation, and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travel, costumes, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a Cyclopedia of History, and Universal Gazetteer, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1851.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have before spoken, and can, therefore, only commend it to our readers. Not only the philosophy of history, but geography, and astronomy, are discussed at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds a history of Asia and America, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds a history of Europe and America. In every respect this Universal History is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby hated by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It is a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

ICE! ICE!! ICE!!!

THE Undersigned begs to return his best thanks to his Customers, for the liberal patronage he has received for the last nine years, and to announce that he has enlarged and added to the number of his ICE HOUSES, having now four, which are filled with pure and wholesome Spring Water Ice, from Yorkville. He is prepared to supply the same to Customers, by contract or otherwise, during the season, commencing from the 1st of June next. The Ice will be conveyed by waggon daily, to places within six miles of Toronto.

All orders sent to Thos. F. Cary, Hairdresser, Front Street, two doors from Church Street, will be punctually attended to.

WHERE all the lovers of human progress and perfection may investigate and apply the laws of PHYSIOLOGY and PHRENOLOGY in harmony with all other sciences, so as to form a correct knowledge of themselves and the laws that govern them and the universe as ordained by our Creator.

In this Museum will be Casts, Masks, and Engravings of men and noted characters, and Busts of the most such as Sir Walter Scott, Napolean Bonaparte, Rubini, the great Poet and a great many others too numerous to mention, which can be seen in the Museum.

ADMISSION FREE.

Rooms over Mr. JOHN H. MOORE'S Store "Emporium," Second Story, Colborne Street,—entrance on Market Street outside, up first flight of stairs, where Mr. PERSONS will make examinations in the above Sciences, give instructions as to the Laws of Life and Health, point out faults, their various kind and degrees, and how to apply them to the best advantage, in whatever Trade, Business or Profession you may be engaged in, and also for what you are best adapted to pursue most successfully in any of the various callings.

CHARTS

Will be given with the greatest care and accuracy, both written and printed, or either. Printed Charts, containing the whole Science of Physiology, Phrenology, and Physiognomy, highly and beautifully illustrated with one hundred engravings, giving and explaining the two extremes of development, large and small, in a scale ranging from one to twenty-one degrees, which enable the individual to read character at first observation, in any attitude, place, or position, including rules for finding the Phrenological organs, and directions for making examinations. Price five shillings, currency, including examination.

Ordinary Printed Charts,	- - -	£0 2 6 cy.

Perfect satisfaction will be given in every particular, or no pay required.

Applications will be gratefully received for visiting Families or Parties at their own residences, in any part of this town.

Orders will be received for any of Fowlers & Wells' publications, wholesale or retail, and promptly attended to.

I consider written descriptions of inestimable value, for which reason I have given this department a more thorough investigation.

Orphans, Widows, and the Poor, will receive verbal examination free of charge.

Hours of attendance from 9 o'clock, a.m., until 10 o'clock, p.m.

WILLIAM PERSONS.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper,
Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,
308, Broadway, New York.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. The Arts, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of Mechanical Industry, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. The Markets will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. The Children will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the
Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,
in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, and their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, represented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the World, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as Attucks, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the Poetry.

From the Ayr Observer.

A STILL DAY IN AUTUMN.

I love to wander through the woodlands hoary,
In the soft gloom of an autumnal day,
When summer gathers up her robes of glory,
And, like a dream of beauty, glides away.

How through each loved, familiar path she lingers
Serenely smiling through the golden mist,
Tinting the wild grape with her dewy fingers,
Till the cool emerald turns to amethyst.

Kindling the faint stars of the hazel, shining
To light the gloom of Autumn's mouldering halls,
With hoary plumes the clematis entwining,
Where o'er the rock her withered garland falls.

Warm lights are on the sleepy uplands waning,
Beneath dark clouds along the horizon rolled,
Till the slant sunbeams through their fringes raining,
Bathe all the hills in melancholy gold.

The moist wind breathes of crisped leaves and flowers,
In the damp hollows of the woodland sown,
Mingling the freshness of autumnal showers
With spicy airs from cedar alleys blown.

Beside the brook and on the cumbered meadow,
Where yellow fern-tufts fleck the faded ground,
With folded lids beneath their palmy shadow,
The gential nods, in dewy slumbers bound.

Upon those soft fringed lids the bee sits brooding
Like a fond lover loth to say farewell,
Or, with shut wings, through silken folds intruding,
Creeps near her heart his drowsy tale to tell.

The little birds upon the hill-side lonely,
Flit noiselessly along from spray to spray,
Silent as a sweet, wandering thought, that only
Shows its bright wings and softly glides away.

The scentless flowers, in the warm sunlight dreaming,
Forget to breath their fulness of delight,—
And through the tranced woods soft airs are streaming,
Still as the dew-fall of the summer night.

So, in my heart a sweet, unwonted feeling
Stirs, like the wind in Ocean's hollow shell,
Through all its secret chambers sadly stealing,
Yet finds no words its mystic charm to tell.

Seth Snipe's Sailor Experience.

A Humorous Sketch.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JUN'R.

Seth Snipe was raised in the State of Maine, and until the age of four-and-twenty he had worked on his father's farm. His home was not far from Kennebec, and often had he seen the noble vessels sailing to and fro up and down the river. It happened that Seth got sick of farming at an early age, and at one period of his early youth he had entertained the idea of being a schoolmaster; but somehow he never could get the committee to believe that he was qualified. Seth learned enough, but it would not stay learned. He had ciphered clear way over to the "single rule-of-three," but the "pesky" rules slipped his mind as soon as he left his book. It also happened that Seth fancied he should like the sea. To him there was something noble and grand in the appearance of a ship coming up the river. And then he had been on board the different vessels that chanced to be at the wharves when he was in town, and once he "climbed clean away up to the top of one of the great tall masts." O, it was beautiful up there, and he could see all round the country.

One other thing happened which put the clincher upon Seth's sea-going proclivities. One summer—the season that he was twenty four years old—a man worked for his father on the farm who had been to sea one voyage from Portland to Havana. This individual was excessively salt. He talked sailor, and wore big-bottomed trowsers without suspenders, and his hat was painted and adorned with a long, wide black ribbon. Seth listened to this man until he was fairly turned. There was nobody else like Wilson—such was the man's name—and the young aspirant used to sit by the hour and listen to fabulous accounts of sea life. Old Mr. Snipe was very indignent at Seth's plan, but that made no odds.

you may take my word for it he'll come back cured. You see he's crazy about it, and you'll never get any good of him till he's been to sea."

So the elder Snipe at length consented that his heir should take a peep at life on the raging sea. The old horse was harnessed to the still older wagon, and preparations were made for starting off after a berth.

"Mind 'at your starboard riggin' is fast, there!" uttered Seth, as his uncle hooked the off breeching strap. He had heard Wilson talk sailor, and he loved to talk so, too.

Uncle John smiled, and said 'twas all fast.

"Neow jest haul yer wind in here, uncle, an' off we go right afore the wind. Avast there, ole Jericho!" Seth cried to the old horse, who was snapping at a fly. "By my tarry toplights, I'll rig a bolun to your head piece!"

Whether the horse understood this direful threat, or whether the fly left, is not certain, but he stood still from that time until they were ready to start. Uncle John was to accompany Seth, for he knew several ship-owners, and might therefore be of service. In due time the old horse reached the town, and Seth and his uncle went down to the river. The ship Eliza Downs lay at one of the wharves; and to her master uncle made his application. Seth was called forward, and the captain commenced to catechize him. But the hero was not to be bluffed now. He had resolved to be a man, and he spoke up boldly.

"I don't know noth'n 'bout yer ship neow, but I want tew larn. I've been clean way up tew the tip top of the great high mast, an' I done it as easy as grease."

Uncle John saw that the captain was becoming incredulous, and he took that functionary one side and conversed with him some time in a whisper. The result was that Seth was engaged for a voyage to Liverpool and back. His wages were to commence at the commencement of his second month's service, and then to be regulated according to his usefulness.

"You'll be on board in just a week from this time," said the captain.

"Ay, ay, sir."

"And mind that you have clothing enough."

"Ay, ay, sir."

Seth was almost crazy with joy. He went down on board the ship, and strolled about awhile like a commodore. He seized the ropes and shook them with a professional air, gave the wheel a turn, caught hold of the backstay and leaped upon the rail, and ended by kicking a coil of rigging out of his way, which some careless fellow, not knowing he was coming, had left in the scupper-way.

Seth's next movement was towards a furnishing store, where he purchased a full rig of seamen's clothes; and after this he went home. His mother wept when she found that he was really going, but he laughed at her.

"Don't worry," whispered uncle John, "for you'll see him again before long. He wont go far."

On the next morning Seth appeared in his glory. He was rigged in full sea costume, even to having a sheath-knife hung to his belt. His usual expletive, "darn," was now changed by leaving out the r, and substituting an m in its place, and this word he applied in a most extraordinary manner to all sorts of imaginary things, such as "buttons," "top-lights," "my eyes," and so on. He told the oxen to "haul their wind," and the cat was ordered to "haul in the slack of her tail."

"Starboard yer helm a bit!" he shouted to his father, who was coming round the corner of the barn in his ox-cart, "starboard, old man, or you'll be afoul of somethin'."

Towards evening Mrs. Snipe went out to the barn, and a cry of horror burst from her lips as she saw her son standing erect on one of the beams, with his arms folded across his breast. But Seth did not hear her.

"Come, you lubbers, in with them tops'ls Clue 'em up quick! By the lightnin', how it does blow! Starboard your helm?"

"Seth! Seth! O, Lord a' mercy, you'll fall!"

The youth looked down and saw his mother.

"Come down out of that, Seth. You'll sartinly fall!"

"Go in, mother. Go below; you don't know noth'n' 'bout it."

But Seth's energy was gone now, and with a show of astonishing boldness he sidled along upon the ten-inch beam towards the point where the hay-mow reached nearly to it.

"Oho—you was a leanin' agin that brace, eh?" uttered the anxious mother, as she saw her son had had support for his back.

"No I wa'n't a leanin' agin it, nuther," retorted the hero, contemptuously. "Do yar think I'm afeared up here? Ef yer do—then—th—a—ah—"

He came nigh losing his balance, and his face turned very pale. But with steps of striking caution he reached the hay, and then let himself down.

"I aint afeard—not me!" he uttered, shaking himself proudly.

And during that week Seth visited all his acquaintances, and wherever he went he gave a glowing account of the brilliant career that was open before him.

"Wont you put on your coat?" asked his mother. "It'll look better than that jacket does."

"I want none of yer lubbery land-toggs on me!" was his majestic reply. So his mother accompanied him in his "little boy's jacket," as she called it.

At length the week wore away, and Seth started for his ship. The parting was dreadful, but he told what magnificent things he

"Dew I sleep in sich a leetle place as that?" asked Seth, as he was shown to his bunk.

"Rather guess so," said his guide.

"Kind o' funny lookin' place, aint it though? Jehosiphat, I should think as heow they might afford better beds than these."

"O, they will by'm-by; but ye see they aint got things fixed."

"O—nh—yaas. But I s'pose I'll be wanted up on deck neow."

And with that Seth went up. The sail down the Kennebec was fine, and Seth was in ecstacies.

"By mitey," he said to himself, "I rather guess these chaps thinks as I'm green. Neow I'll jest show 'em 'at I aint. By the mincin' Jemina, I will." And with this remark Seth made his way into the main rigging with some difficulty, and then began to ascend the shrouds. He seemed a little jealous of the rattlings at first but when he found they held him, he went on more boldly. At length, by dint of much perseverance, he reached the futtock shrouds, and here he got stuck.

"Gaul blast it," he muttered, "dew they s'pose sich a feller's I am ken git through sich a hole as that is. Hellow, yeou sailor man, up there; heow 'n thunder dew yer git up there where yeu be, hay?"

"Ah, spooney, is that you?" cried the topman, looking over.

"My name is Snipe, mister—Seth Snipe. Mebbe ye didn't know it. But how dew ye get up thar?"

"Come right up."

"But this pesky hole aint big enough for me to git through."

"We don't come through the lubber-hole, spooney; we come right over here."

Seth looked up and saw that the futtock shrouds were rattled down, and after some consideration upon the subject he concluded that he would go back, and he would have done so had not the man above laughed at him. This quickened his energies, and he made a desperate effort. At last he was able to reach the topmast shrouds, and with a convulsive scrambling he reached the top. He looked down upon the deck and turned pale. Then he sat tremblingly down, with his arms wound tightly about the stoutest rigging he could find, and began to get his breath.

"Kind o' ticklish up here, aint it?" he said to his companion, who was engaged in getting the studding-sails ready for setting.

"Is it?" was the laconic response.

"By gaul, aint it though. But say, did yeou come up over jest as I did?"

"Just about."

"But what d'ye call them leetle short rope ladders right under here?"

"Them's the flapawback railways."

"Jerewsalum! I should think they was flapawack. Why, a feller's bottom side upwards there, aint he? By gaul, I thought I should 'a' catnipped rite off? I s'pose you don't never come up here in the dark, dew yer?"

"You'll think so, I guess, afore you've been here long."

"Main-top, there!" at this moment came from the deck.

"Ay, ay," returned the topman.

"Come down here and help to stow the anchor."

The sailor secured the studding-sail, and then swung himself easily around the topmast rigging, and in a moment more he had disappeared below the edge of the top.

"Wal—neow that feller did that kind o' slick—I vum he did."

"Come, spooney, come down and give us a lift."

"Yi—yi—yi," returned Seth.

But the thing was not so easily done. He had managed to get over the projecting edge of the top, but getting down was another matter. He laid down upon his face and looked over, but he couldn't imagine how he was ever to reach those "little ladders clean way in under thar." And the longer he looked the more difficult it appeared. He turned his attention to the lubber-hole, but that was closed to him. He might have got through the hole itself, but he couldn't get through the "tarnal great ropes that were strung all round rite under it."

The ship passed Bath before the topman went down, and ere long Seguin was on the beam. In fifteen minutes more the great ocean was opened, and the heavy swells began to show themselves. There had been a stiff northeaster blowing, and the sea was rough.

"O! O! O!" groaned Seth, clinging to the topmast shrouds with all his might. "Murder! Fire! Brimstone! O!"

The ship's course lay her directly in the trough of the sea, and she rocked and rolled considerably. Poor Seth was performing such evolutions as he never dreamed of before. The place where he sat moved in an arc of some thirty feet in length, and the motion was not of a very agreeable kind.

But a new source of trouble presented itself. Seth began to feel a motion in his stomach unlike anything he had ever before experienced. He grew pale as death, and a mortal sickness came over him. His grasp upon the shrouds began to weaken, and nothing short of death presented itself to him. To get down from the top he could not, and he knew that he should not be able long to remain there.

"Mercy! O, Jerewsalum! what did I cum here for?" he groaned. "Hellow! fire! murder! I'm dyin'! Come and take me down!"

In a few moments after this the order was passed to set the studding sails, and the maintop-men came up into the top.

"Hallow, spooney. Sick, eh!"

"O, mercy! save me! Dew ot a ladder

"What's the matter! Why didn't ye come down afore?"

"'Cause I couldn't. O, my boweels! O, I daren't go onto them flapawhacker ways, thar. The plaguy things puts a feller rite bottom side up! O! O! I'm dyin'! Git me daown?"

The topman saw that the poor fellow was weak and faint, and they concluded to let him down. So they made a running bowline on the end of the top-rope and drew it taut under his arms.

"By the great bar, ye aint a goin' tew hang me!"

"Easy, easy, spooney."

"Snipe, my name is. O—awah!"

In a moment more poor Seth was over the after part of the top, and as the line was let out he began to sway to and fro in a most unpleasant manner. He yelled and shouted with fright, but he could only kick the air in his wildcontortions. When he at last reached the deck, he shook the rope off for fear he should be again hoisted up. He had just got the line clear, and was about to turn to the captain and mate who stood convulsed with laughter, when there came a heavy sea dashing over the rail. The ship broached to leeward, and Seth was thrown upon his back, and away he went into the lee scuppers, where he floundered in the cold salt water until the captain hauled him out. He had contrived to swallow full a pint of briny liquid, and such another picture of absolute despair and misery was never before seen on board that ship.

"O, cap'n, dear, dew go back an' let me git eout. O, I can't stan' this. Why can't he go back?"

"Pooh, nonsense. You'll soon get over this, my brave fellow. Why, I wouldn't lose such a noble sailor for anything. I mean in less than a week to have you do wonders."

"Jerewsalum! only jest look at that feller clean way out on the tip eend o' that great long cross-beam. My gracious, what a careless dog."

"You'll have to go out there pretty soon, Seth."

"Me? Never! O—aw! O, my stomach! No, sir. Yeou doan't get me up onto that ere darned top agin. I tell ye, I aint a goin' to be made—"

At this moment the ship gave another lurch, and away went Seth again into the scuppers, this time striking his head against the bulwarks. Once more he was helped to his feet, and now he began to cry in good earnest. He blubbered like a sick calf, and at length the cook came and helped him below.

On the next morning the ship entered Boston harbor, where she put in for part of her cargo. Seth got permission to go on shore, and with long, quick strides he made his way to the city. Within himself he swore that he would never go aboard the "tarnal ole thing agin." And he was as good as his word. He took a day's rest, and then he started out through Charlestown to Malden. He got several opportunities to ride, and before night he reached Haverhill.

In just one week from the day on which Seth Snipe sailed he reached his home. He came by the way of fields and woods, for he dared not show his face on the highway. His mother was delighted, and his father was satisfied.

"Why Seth, bow' this?" asked uncle John.

"Haow is it?" iterated the youth, with a most comical expression, in which disgust and shame were about equally blended. "Why, I rayther thought as haow I'd cum hum an' see the folks. The fact on't is, aour ship stopped to Bosting, an' when I was ashore the ole thing went off an' left me."

But of course the truth leaked out. Seth went to work once more on the farm, and he was content, for he had seen enough of the sea. For a long while he had little peace among his mates, for the story of his experience as a sailor was too good to be lost. And even now, though years have elapsed, he is known as "Captain Snipe," or "Snipe the main-topman." And once in a while some of his waggish relatives superscribe his letters after the same fashion. Not long since I saw, in the post-office at Gardiner, a letter directed to "Captain Seth Snipe, of the ship Eliza Downs." And then in one corner was added, "To the care of the main-top." It was there I learned the story of his sea-going experience.

Marriage.

Matrimony is an engagement which must last the life of one of the parties, and there is no retracting, vestigia nulla retrorsum; therefore to avoid all the horror of a Repentance that comes too late, men should thoroughly know the real causes that induce them to take so important a step, before they venture upon it: do they stand in need of a wife, an heiress or a nurse; is it their Passions, their Wants or their Infirmities that solicit them to wed? Are they candidates for that happy state, propter opus, or opem? according to the epigram. These are questions much more proper to be proposed before men go to the altar, than after it; they are points which well ascertained, would prevent many disappointments, often deplorable, often ridiculous, always remediless.—Colton.

From the American Phrenological Journal.

Hints to Husbands and Wives.

It is the business of husbands to appreciate the tender and susceptible nature of woman. To take time and thought for a clear understanding of them phrenologically, which shall make it easier for general allowance; easier to bear, and forbear; to call out harmony when want of congeniality in feeling, or, in-business to know that diseases and weaknesses peculiar to the delicate female frame call for compassionate kindness, manly, patient support, and not for harsh intollerance or coldness, when the frailer one droops by their side. How does it happen, that with more than half the married couples one sees, if we note any frank expression of endearment, any affectionate gallantry or smiling courtesy, directly somebody says, "There is a new-married couple," or, "That must be a second wife?" What is the matter here? Why among those other wedded ones is the manner cold, careless, abrupt, or at least a negative civility? Has the wife grown slovenly, unattractive, unloveable, snarling, unmindful of wifely duties, or is it not oftener that the husband has neglected the home business? Has year by year settled down more self-centered into his abstracted, chosen track, leaving her to become less and less identified with him; her mind and heart developing as it may happen, and not at all under his concious, earnest, thoughtful influence, so that the delicate fabric of their first affection is ground down to common dust?

Ah! there are husbands and wives, for I have seen them, who have lived together years and years, their heads have grown gray together, and children have been born to them, and yet there have been depths in their hearts that each other never knew or dreamed of. Choice feelings that blossomed—and faded—in their cells for want of recognition. Smothered bitterness, that never came to the light to be wiped away with sweet forgiveness, but lay curdling under the growth of custom and dogged endurance. There are words that should have been said, retractions and explanations that should have been made, that are not said and made, no, never on this side the grave!

There are thirsty hearts that want to be told every day, yet oftener, that they are loved, appreciated, known, that cannot bear long fasting, that must have the reassurance which lives in a caress, the eye, the voice. There are other natures, dry, cool, self-nourished, complacently moving on through their busy or worldly cares, who do not need that healing balm, who shake it off as rain is shed from the well-oiled, glossy breast of a bird.

A woman wants to be understood as well as loved, and no man can make a woman really happy unless he understands her, not not only in relation to all the attributes and liabilities of her sex, but individually, and we may as well add, his own also. No doubt many have gone on pretty smoothly without the light of science, by the help of strong mutual affection, large human nature, and benevolence, and good power of adaptation; but had they been more enlightened, they might have made each other happier still. In that good time when such knowledge will be widely spread by the aid of phrenology, we shall have husbands who know better how to appreciate and treat their wives. Then, a man will comprehend that a woman with a fine mental temperament, large Conscientiousness and Approbativeness, and small Hope and Self-Esteem, needs to be soothed and encouraged, not blamed or ever chidden, especially if Combativeness be also large, that another more coarsely organized, with large Self-Esteem, Mirth, and Hope, will make light of what would utterly crush the other. Then he will try to calm and divert, instead of ridiculing her extreme caution or sympathy, will know better how to assimilate if she have the larger moral organs, and he the religious, or vice versa, and not scold or be chafed by her preferring a different church and style of preaching from his own.

Illustration of Kisses.

The "editress" of the New York "Ladies' Repository," talking about kissing, says:—Kisses, like faces of philosophers, vary. Some are as hot as coal-fire, some sweet as honey, some mild as milk, some tasteless as long drawn soda-water. Stolen kisses are said to have more nutmeg and cream than other sorts. As to proposed kisses, they are not liked at all. A stolen kiss is the most agreeable. We have been kissed a few times, and, as we are not very old, we hope to receive many more.

The Youth that was Hung.

The Sheriff took out his watch, and said, "if you have anything to say, speak now, for you have only five minutes to live." The young man burst into tears, and said: "I have to die. I had only one little brother, he had beautiful blue eyes and flaxen hair, and I loved him; but one day I got drunk, for the first time in my life, and coming home, I found my little brother gathering strawberries in the garden, and I become angry with him without a cause, and I killed him at one blow with a rake. I did not know anything about it until the next morning, when I awoke from sleep, and found myself tied and guarded, and was told that when my little brother was found, his hair was clotted with blood and brains, and he was dead Whisky has done this. It has ruined me. I never was drunk but once. I have only one more word to say, and then I am going to my final Judge. I say to you people, Never! Never! Never! touch anything that can intoxicate." As he pronounced these words, he sprang from the box, and was launched into an endless eternity.

I was melted into tears at the recital, and the awful spectacle. My little heart seemed as if it would burst, and break away from my aching bosom, so intolerable were my feelings of grief. And there, in that carriage, while on that cushioned seat, looking with streaming eyes on the body of that unfortunate young man, as it hung, dangling and writhing between heaven and earth, as if

Long years have since passed away; white hairs have thickened around these temples, then so ruddy and so young, but I never have forgotten the last words of that young man. And I have never violated that pledge. When the tempter has offered to me the sparkling goblet, the words of that young man have seemed to sound in my ears again. —Old Man's Story.

To Keep Milk Sweet.

A. Boyd, a corespondent of the Scientific American, states that he has practised a peculiar method, with much success, of preserving milk sweet in the pans. It simply consists in placing a piece of new hammered iron or three twelve-penny nails in each tin pan, then pouring the warm milk on them. He believes that electricity has something to do with producing the result. He had tried many experiments before he hit upon this one, which he found to preserve the milk sweet for a longer time than any other plan tried by him. It is worth a trial by our farmers and dairymen.—Olive Branch.

Cement for Broken China, Glass, &c.

The following receipt from experience we know to be a good one, and, being nearly colorless, it possesses advantages which liquid glue and other cements do not: Dissolve half an ounce of gum acacia in a wine glass of boiling water; add plaster of Paris sufficient to form a thick paste, and apply it with a brush to the parts required to be cemented together. Several articles upon our toilet-table have been repaired most effectually by this receipt.—Life Illustrated.

Kill or Cure.

A doctor was employed by a poor man to attend his wife, who was dangerously ill. The doctor gave a hint 'that he had fears of not being paid.'

"I have five pounds," said the man to the doctor, "and if you kill or cure, you shall have them."

The woman died in the doctor's hands and after a reasonable time he called for his five pounds. The man asked the doctor if he killed his wife?

'No.'

'Did you cure?'

'No.'

'Then,' said the man, 'you have no legal demand.'

Cuba and Slavery.

In 1855, according to statistics given us by Mr. Ballou, the number of whites in Cuba was about 605,000; of free-colored people, about 205,000; and of slaves 442,000. There are great discrepancies in the accounts given by travellers of the treatment of these slaves. One authority will tell us they are treated far more kindly, more as though they were men and women, than in the States; another, that they are overworked with the utmost cruelty and severity. Both statements are correct, the explanation being, that in Cuba there is less pride of color, and therefore more general humanity, while in certain especial employments, there is more temptation to overdriving. Perhaps the Spanish pride is monopolized by the nobles, and in their eyes a white plebeian may be little above a slave; or perhaps the republican insist more upon the color, because he has not the cast-distinction; at any rate, we find this distinction less jealously guarded by either law or custom. The laws of many of the "States" make emancipation a crime; the laws of Cuba make it under certain conditions compulsory. If a New Orleans slave be a clever artisan, his master only values him the higher, and thanks fortune which has given his "chattel" brains as well as muscles; but in Havanna this same artisan would buy himself with his earnings. "An authoritative arbitration may settle his value on his own appeal, and as soon as he shall accumulate fifty dollars, his master is obliged to accept the sum as an instalment. . . . . The Cuban law, too, forbids the infliction of more than twenty-five lashes, and the master who maltreats his slave is compelled, as in Turkey, to sell him." Doubtless, such laws as these are more easily enacted than enforced, but the large proportion of freed-people proves that the temper of the country cannot be altogether at variance with them. These regulations, however apply almost entirely to the non-predial class—to the household and city slaves, not to those on the plantations. On them, especially on the enormous sugar-estates, slave-labor, backed by the slave-trade, has, economically speaking, a fair chance. The plant is costly, the capital invested large; there is every inducement to get as much return out of the human portion of the machinery as possible, even at the expense of frequent renewal. It pays to import young hands from Africa, to whip their work out of them in a few years, and then the sooner they die off, the cheaper. The work for both men and women is terrible: "even on the best of the great estates, from November to May, sixteen and sometimes nineteen hours a day." And yet, for their masters there is safety in this toil; for, herded and fed like cattle, with no care over them—religious, moral or social—with but few women, with every incitement to ferocity, what would these poor savages do with their energies if the whip ceased for a moment? It appears also, that among the Bozales, or imported Africans, there are many men belonging to tribes of fierce, ungovernable character—men with much natural intelligence, but without the

A Chapter in the Book of Chronicles.

1. And it came to pass after these things, that King Franklin, the First, in the third year of his reign, appointed one John, whose surname was Wheeler, to the office of Ambassador to the land of Nicaragua.

2. And John had a bond woman, whose name was Jane, and he said, I will take her with me that she may serve me whithersoever I go.

3 And he departed, taking with him Jane and her two sons, and went unto Philadelphia, intending to sail for Nicaragua.

4. Now in the county where Philadelphia is there is no slavery, and every one coming there is free

5. Now there lived in Philadelphia a just and righteous man, whose name was Passmore.

6. And he hearing that Jane was held in bondage in the city, determined to release her, and he went unto her and told her she was free.

7. And John was angry, and would not let him have Jane, but he feared the people.

8. And Jane departed north to the city of New York, and when John saw he could not obtain her he was wroth with Passmore, and said unto himself, I will be revenged.

9. Now, there was in the city, an unjust and unrighteous Judge whose name was Cain, and John went unto him and complained of Passmore, saying he has robbed me of my servants.

10. Then Cain issued a decree requiring Passmore to bring Jane and her two sons before him; and Passmore came forward and swore that they were not in his possession.

11. Then Cain charged him with contempt and perjury, and shut him up in prison.

Sebastopol Taken.

Two days ago, the news of the fall of Sebastopol was received here. Soon the flag was hoisted, on a public building, and then followed the greatest enthusiasm. At night the public houses were illuminated and also several private ones. Fire-works were displayed, while the Amateur Band added much pleasure, by their sweet music.

The particulars of the glorious victory will be found in another column of to-day's issue.

Scoble and Henson, and a Public Challenge.

In consequence of sickness, we were not at the meeting of John Scoble & Co., held of late at Chatham. But as it is currently reported, that John Scoble and Josiah Henson, sen., used language respecting Rev. Samuel H. Davis; Deacons George Johnson, and Alexander Duncan, Mr. J. C. Brown, and ourselves, which made the impression that a large amount of property belonging to the Dawn Institute had been put into our possession, as the servants of the American Baptist Free Mission Society, and that we had embezzled it, or made away with it improperly, and never given any account of it, we deem it but due to ourselves and the public, not only to deny such a slanderous charge, made in such a covered manner; but also to CHALLENGE John Scoble and Josiah Henson to state publicly, either orally, or in print, that WE DID EMBEZZLE either the property of the Dawn Institute, or any one else's property, or that we were even a party to such an act in any way.

As Agent for the American Baptist Free Mission Society, into whose hand the property referred to was placed, (with wear and tear excepted, and the breaking a few pieces of crockery and cutlery, and one cow, which was butchered and eaten, by the students and labourers on the place,) we put the same property into the hands of ONE OF THE TRUSTEES of the Institute, in the presence of some five or six witnesses, when we resigned our agency. Besides, as servants of the Society, we had to account to it, for the property put into our hands, and that we have done. If there is anything wrong, let the Society call us to account, and we are ready to give account either of our stewardship or of the property, to any such an INTERLOPER as John Scoble is, or to such a Reverend MEDDLER and SPECULATOR as is Josiah Henson, sen.

For us, it was enough to deny the charge, and challenge the cowardly tyrant and his abject slave, who are afraid to say distinctly what they would make others believe to be true; but we have said more, for the information of our friends, and as for our enemies, they are such as do disgrace us, in noticing them. There are two ways at least to know, who or what a person is,—the good character of friends, and the infamy of foes. Let the public judge; since men respect one for the praise of the good and the abuse of the bad.

The Trustees of the Dawn Institute approved of the conduct of the "American Baptist Free Mission Society," and passed a resolution of thanks to them for their faithful performance of duty, &c. We dare Scoble and Henson to deny it? Yet with a knowledge of that fact, the people are told, that the "Society robbed the Institution." The Society is distinguished and able to defend itself against the calumny of such pitiful excuses for honest men! The Society, if it felt disposed to do so, could tell some hard things about the obtaining of money under false pretences, in England, and the artful and dishonest dealing in Canada, of its enemies. We doubt not, but the Society will feel it to be its duty, yet to expose the villianous scheme of its defamers. It has long thrown the cloak of charity around them. If John Scoble and Josiah Henson, sen., do not accept our challenge, &c., then the public must know that they really are base falsifiers and deservers of the public scorn!

"Slander! thou foul-mouth'd fiend,
Enemy of God and man;
When will thy power end,
When will thy empire wan?

Ye slanderers of the stainless name,
For you has God declared,
That liars shall endure the flame,
For them of old prepared.

And when death stares you in the face,
Can you to God restore,
A heart received by saving grace,
To live for evermore?

No! For you the worm that never dies,
Shall oft recall to mind;
That those who take delight in lies,
A fiery portion find."

Let the public be on its guard for these artful fellows are travelling through the country, trying to bolster up their reputation. Let them be treated everywhere, as the good people of Dawn and Chatham treat them—with PERFECT CONTEMPT! We have heard, though we do not assert it as true, that John and Judas abused, at this Chatham meeting, the colored people of Dawn, virtually indicating them to be a set of thieves, paupers, and murderers, whom Scoble had to keep from starving last winter. We have no doubt but the people of Dawn will call such an impudent falsifier to an account. The world may know what to think of Scoble's statements and explanations at Chatham, for when the modern "Judas" proposed a vote of thanks to his masters—the good people of Chatham had the purity of spirit to vote it down! So much at least shows that the good freehold citizens of Chatham had been deceived in the getting up of the meeting, through their influence. They doubtless learned that there was rottenness among the self-styled "Simeon-pure." John Scoble ought to put his hand upon his dirty mouth, whenever he goes to speak of the infirmities of others. He ought to know, that we in Canada know something of his history. And as for Josiah Henson, sen., he is the last man that ought to say even one word about the dishonesty of others. He should not forget, that the Penitentiary has not yet received all her dues, or she would have had long since within her walls, a black dictator of a false history of his life, with an appendix, by one we would not believe "on oath," from the TOWNSHIP OF CAMDEN!

Let the friends of justice throughout the country send in the money needed to the Committee, appointed at the Dawn Convention, to enable them to enter an action, in the Court of Chancery, for the Dawn property, ON BEHALF OF THE PEOPLE! THERE THE TRUTH WILL BE TOLD!

THANKS.

☞ Our esteemed friend, JOSIAH CLIFFORD, of Port Dover, will accept our gratitude for the money which came to hand a few days since.

WILLIAM H. DAY.

☞ We have had the pleasure of a visit from our distinguished friend, W. H. DAY, and his wife, for a few days. He delivered an inimitable lecture at Dawn, on Lord's-Day, at 3 o'clock, p. m.:—"On the Good Time Coming!" We hope to have our friend's name enrolled as Corresponding Editor of the Freeman, if no more.

He has purchased the Farm of the Rev. Mr. Clark, of Dresden, C. W., and we hope before long to be blessed with our learned friend's presence, as a Canadian citizen.

☞ The Toronto Colonist says:—Hay is scarce, and what is supplied is for the greater part of inferior quality. The best loads were selling as high as $26 to $28 per ton, while inferior quality has varied from $17 to $26. Straw is scarce, but not in much demand, at $10½ to $13 per ton.

Mark the above, colored farmers, who are selling your Hay for $8 per ton, in the

The Rights of Colored People.

To the Editor of the Globe.

SIR—I take the liberty of laying before you the following instance of gross outrage upon color which came under my observation, a few nights ago, on one of the Boats plying between Hamilton and Oswego. The Clergyman of Sayer St. Church, Toronto, with his wife and child, went on board the America, at Hamilton, on Tuesday evening, and having paid the full fare between Chatham and Toronto, they were about to enter the Saloons to which they supposed they were entitled, when to their surprise, they were told "that colored persons were not allowed to enter there." Being informed of this specimen of American prejudice, I with other gentlemen, held an interview with the Purser, and then with the Captain, the latter of whom treated us with great urbanity. He was sorry for the colored clergyman and assured us that he was obliged to conform to the Regulations of the Boats in thus treating persons of color, or the consequences would be of the most unpleasant character, as for instance, were colored people to enter the Saloons, white Ladies? and gentlemen? would immediately withdraw, were they to sit at table; the Whites would soon remove, and even the Stewards, in some instances, would refuse to wait upon them.

Now, Sir, if such regulations are to be practised on Boats which sail on the Lakes of Canada, it is high time for Britons to be asking themselves whether they are under the Government of Victoria, or that of the boasted Republic, for most assuredly, if we quietly allow this invasion upon the rights of man to take place, others perhaps of a worse character will soon be introduced

I have further to remark that in the case before us, the usual amount for saloon privileges had been paid. The fare from Chatham to Toronto is $5¼, which was paid and a Ticket received, upon which there was the following imprint, Exclusive of Meals! Will it be believed that such an imprint is not put on the Tickets of White people, as facts in the writer's possession will show. The captain said that such imprint signified, that the party owning the Tickets, could travel 1st Class, by the Cars, but not 1st Class on the Boat, and on hearing that the colored clergyman had paid $5¼, from Chatham, gave orders that half a dollar should be refunded, but the clergyman at the request of his wife refused to take it. This leads me to think that the deception was practised at Chatham, for it is a marvellous affair, that a white man in paying $5¼ at Chatham can travel to Toronto, and be accommodated on the America or the Canada, with a seat in the Saloon, and a substantial Meal in first rate style, while a colored gentleman paying the same amount, on going on board, can have none of these privileges, and receive no more favour than the beast which carries your burden.

The friends of humanity have need to labour earnestly, doubtless for a considerable time to come, to spread the truth that "God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth," and there is great need to do this, especially at this time, seeing that the intercourse between Canada and the U. States is so great, that unless we do so, the prejudice in respect of color, that are suffered to prevail there, may become equally so here.

Yours, respectfully,
EDWARD BARRASS.

Toronto, August 24th, 1855.

We fully sympathize in all that is said in the above letter. Excluding respectable persons from the cabins of Canadian steamers because of their color is utterly revolting to our feelings as Britons, and we hope to see an alteration. We have no doubt that the Captain of the steamboat referred to thought that he was doing his duty to his employers by excluding the colored clergyman, and that he did not act from any feelings of his own, but undoubtedly he made a mistake. We do not believe that public opinion in Canada demands the degradation of colored people. Nay we are convinced that every true Canadian would feel indignant at the injustice done to them. As to the Americans, when they come to our side of the lines, they must do like us, and they are generally too much men of the world to make any objections.—Globe.

The above, a friend has sent us, for our views respecting it. Well, it is a manifestation of subtle arrangement to plunder the public, not only of their rights, but also of their money. It is a piece of high-handed villiany, that no steamboat owners would be guilty of, in Canada, but those who did the dirty deed. Thank God! we have in our country no other Railway, or Steamboat Company so base, but the "Great Western Railroad Company;" and, indeed, we are not disposed to fault the Company, in this matter, but a few hirelings—a set of usurpers, much worse than the canine dough-faces of the neighbouring country, a dollar-making clique, who are better fitted to control the affairs of the "Townsend-gang," than the thoroughfares of a civilized and Christian community, such as Canada is. But to be a little more particular.

The Clergyman should have entered the Saloons, as he had paid to do so, and if they put hands on him, to have defended himself, and if, with their assault, there had been battery, the law of the country would have made the villians dearly pay for their fiendish work; but even for the assault, the law would have sustained him. The case of Mr. Gallego against the Magnet, we think, is in point.

It appears that the Purser was not quite so urbane, as the Captain was. Wonder if he is not a Yankee? Possibly he may be a slaveholder from the South. It is true that many of the employed, in our Hotels, Railways, Steamboats, Stage-lines, &c., are from the nation of theoretical liars—a republic of men-stealers. If there are not honest men enough in Canada, to fill such situations, let us send to the "Old World" for them; for what can we hope for our country, if felons, such as God's word says "shall be put to death," occupy such positions among us?

We are made to laugh, to hear that the hope it was not the mere love of the everlasting dollar that pushed it in sight, of the passengers that night. His conduct, in time to come, will show whether, after all, its exhibition on that occasion was not base hypocrisy. Indeed, we need no further proof than he gave that such, and such alone, it was. Did he not show that it was to the colored Clergyman and his wife? Let the following answer. It is said, that he said, that it would be "most unpleasant, were colored persons to enter the Saloons, white ladies? and gentlemen? would immediately withdraw." He being a "white" gentleman? "would withdraw," of course. Now, should the "white ladies and gentlemen" do so, on the entering of respectable and decent colored persons, it would be proof incontestable that they were not ladies and gentlemen in the common acceptation of the term. Who would regard such an act, as lady-like or gentleman-like; should it be performed by the Captain's white ladies and gentlemen! on Mrs. Doctor O'Brien or Mrs. Captain Keyton entering the Saloons? We tell that very Captain, that he, instead of withdrawing from, would regard it an honor to stop in the Saloons, where such ladies of color were. He would no more treat them, as he did the Clergyman's wife, than he would jump overboard; no, not he But he adds, "were they (colored persons) to sit at table, the Whites would soon remove." White prostitutes and felons do such things, but we doubt very much, whether a lady or gentleman ever did, or would do so, and the Captain has a block for a head, if he do not know it. We hope the Clergyman does not thank him for his "sorry," &c. We assure him, that the colored people of this country do not need his sympathy. We want him to know, that he, and every hireling, like him, shall give us our rights, and that the laws of our country bear us out in demanding them, both of him and his masters. But, it is said, "even the Stewards refuse to wait upon them"—colored persons. Who are Stewards? A set of servants. Should they refuse to do their duty, the Captain should see that they are instantly removed. He should have been ashamed to have uttered such a thing. It shows his incompetency for the office he holds. Instead of his being able to control the boat, or passengers, and crew, in unison with law or order, they control him, contrary to all law or propriety. His own argument shows that "white ladies? and gentlemen? and stewards," make the laws and arrangements of his boat, and that they compel him to do as he does. Now the sooner the Company gets rid of such an effeminate tool, of stewards, &c., the better it will be for it. A slave is unfit to be a Captain. The climate of South Carolina is more congenial to the nature of the Captain and that of his "white ladies and gentlemen and stewards," than the pure society of British freemen. If his stewards are black one's—we are sorry and glad. Sorry that they are so devilish, mean, and undutiful, as to "refuse to wait" on persons of their own color; but glad that they are the Captain's superiors—that they are fit to, and do control him, is true, according to his own showing. But should the Stewards be white outside, then they are too black and mean within, for us to take further notice of them.

Our friend, EDWARD BARRASS is right in his views of the encroachment of the infernal influence of "Uncle Jonathan," the Jesuit. We thank him, and those who stood with him, for ourselves, and on behalf of our people, for their British, manful, and Christian defence of our—yes, the rights of every man and woman in our country.

We have intimated, that we did not blame the Railway Company for the conduct of the Captain; still, either they or the Directors are to be blamed for the printing of two kinds of tickets, to suit the color of one's face, and not the amount of his money. What right has the Company to imprint on the tickets, handed to colored people, on the receipt of their fare—it being the same in amount that white's pay, "EXCLUSIVE OF MEALS! while it is not so, on the tickets handed to white persons? We also know that to be a fact! We say, fearlessly, that the parties guilty of such acts, should be regarded and treated as public plunderers. We hope the Noble "Coon" catchers for Lambton, or somebody else, will tell the public—whether the Parliament, in granting to the Great Western Railroad Company a Charter for their road, gave them also the privilege of plundering the travelling community?

The act is one for baseness unprecedented. We hope the guilty parties will be so ashamed of themselves, that they could spit in their own faces. Even in the United States, colored people, in many cases, are allowed to enter the Saloons, and are treated with more respect; and in no case, that ever we heard of, do they pay to enter and not do so. The very fact, that the Captain ordering a half dollar to be given back, to the Clergyman, shows that he, even, was ashamed of the villianous trick designed to be passed upon the colored people, in the printing and selling of such tickets. It is supposed that the fault is in the Agency at Chatham—no doubt but that party is guilty, but it is a plan arranged all along the line. A ticket of the same imprinting was handed to us, not long since, at "Windsor." We did not give the villian a chance to defraud us, out of our money, as the Agency at Hamilton very well know, for after tell us over our money, and we went to Toronto on the Chief JUSTICE Robinson.

Let colored men do their duty, and resist to "the very death," such Yankee tools, in our country, and soon the Railroad Company will learn to do better. There are many ways to make such Companies feel for their wrong doing, besides such scenes as the "Erie tragedy." Humanity, clad with a colored skin, will not bear forever the white man's abuse.

If the remarks of the Globe, in respect to the case referred to, were penned by Brother George, we must say, that hitherto, he has given us to understand, that there was more Anti-cast in him, than they indicate! But, if written by Father Peter, then, we must remind him, that he needs "more grace" to make him an Apostle!! We say nothing of doubtful Thomas!!!

Look out for a Rascal.

Some time in June last, a colored man came to Norristown, calling himself Rev. Charles Smith, and representing that he had formerly been a slave, but was emancipated through the Rev. Dr. Johns, of Baltimore, and that his wife and children had been taken from a slave-pen in Richmond, by said Johns, who stood responsible for their value until he (Smith) could raise the money, some $900, from the philanthropic. Dr. Johns was written to, and he replied that he knew no such man, neither a man by that name, nor in that position. The Rev. Chas. Smith, (whose real name we afterwards learned to be Ned Carter) was arrested for obtaining money under false pretences.

He told a story full of inconsistencies and evident falsehoods, so he was committed to prison to wait his trial at the next court. In the mean time a gentleman from Norristown visited Baltimore, thought he had learned his history, and published a statement in the Olive Branch representing that Chas. Smith alias Ned Carter, was a slave, and that although he had evidently falsified, he was entitled to the sympathy of the friends of the slave and plainly hinted that abolitionists had "oppressed or accused him on mere suspicion." On these representations he asked to be liberated, and on the opening of the court, he was suffered to go free.

We have since been furnished with the following letter from Carter's former master, Cosmo Sunderland, whose name was furnished by Carter himself:

State of Maryland, Calvert County, }
September, 3rd, 1855. }

DEAR SIR:—I received yours this day, and am truly sorry to hear that Edward Carter is so meanly and wickedly at work; he is free and duly recorded; he was the best servant I ever raised; he married a free woman with two children all free; they have parted, and his wife is here in the neighborhood working about as she can get work to live on. Ned is a first rate hand. I offered him two prices to work for me by the year, but no, he would not go to Baltimore. He had better come home to his wife or go to work for his own living. I am obliged to you my dear brother, for writing to me. Pray for me. Yours in love,
COSMO SUNDERLAND.

In addition to these facts we have seen a letter to a gentleman in this place from Carter, asking for a certificate of character, &c., and stating that he (Carter) had raised some $30 for him and his lawyer. We suppose he is imposing upon the credulity of the benevolent in New York or elsewhere.

We hope the Anti-Slavery and other papers will note these facts and publish this vile imposter. He is a very large man, some 6 feet in height, well built, and is very dark. He speaks quite well, and professed to be a pious Methodist preacher.

We are informed that this man collected money in Canada, New York, New Jersey and other places before he came to Norristown.—Olive Branch.

The Indiana Black Law.

Article 13 of the Constitution of Indiana prohibits colored people from settling in the State, and the very Anglo-Saxon citizens through their Legislature have a law in force for securing the observance of this provision, which forbids "any negro or mulatto" to stop in the States, over ten days, we believe is the time.

About the middle of July, a Mr. James P. Brown, a citizen of this State, whom God gave a skin a little darker than some others, in travelling westward was detained a few days in Fort Wayne, and while peaceably attending to his own business, was arrested on complaint of John Hardendoff, [who ought henceforth to be shunned by all honorable and Christian men as a petty spy, and malicious informer] and on his own admission of being a citizen of Ohio, was fined $10 and costs!

We thought the constitution of the U. States guaranties the citizens of one State "all the rights and privileges of the citizens of every other State."

But it seems our Indiana neighbours can arrest and fine a man for no other offence than being "a citizen of Ohio," for if Mr. Brown had been a resident of their own State he would have been discharged. If we were in congress, we would demand that Indiania be forced to repeal her law, so manifestly interfering with the rights of other States.

Mr. Brown refused to pay the fine, and was committed to jail; a writ of habeas corpus sued out, and the case was argued at length. The counsel contended for the strict reading of the law; namely, the person to be convicted must be a "negro" or a mulatto." As it could not be contended that the person was a "negro," it was necessary for the prosecution to prove he was a "mulatto" in the exact definition that Webster gives that word; namely, "the offspring of negress by a white man," or vise versa. As this could not be done, the man was set at liberty.

It is evident the judge had more humanity than our law makers; and it is hoped the people of our sister State will soon outgrow such a proscriptive and unnecessary policy.

A Charitable Negro.

A few days since, Jesse Harrison, a colored fruit pedlar, marched through the streets of Baltimore with a basket, and a large placard, on which was, "The proceeds of this day's sale will be devoted to the colored sufferers at Norfolk and Portsmouth." At Negro Catching.

On Friday, two fugitive slaves were arrested in the passenger train on the Madison Indiana railroad, near, Dupont, by John Maucourt, Esq., and Wm. Monroe, Esq. The first holds the responsible position of conducter of the train; the latter is Adams & Co's Express Agent. The fugitives had been hunted with dogs on the other side of the river; these, after a desperate fight, they had killed with their knives. The fugitives wandered about from Sunday night until Friday without provisions. Worn-out, ragged, foot-sore, having had nothing to eat but what the orchards and forest trees provided, they despaired of escape, and, hailing the cars, were taken to Vernon to the U. S Commissioner, remanded to slavery on their own admission of being fugitives from labour, brought to this city on the return of the train, and before sundown were safe on the shores of our sister State, Kentucky.—Madison Courier.

☞ Alas for freedom, when such a heartless paragraph can be found in a Northern Democratic paper! Alas for freedom, when such a heartless party receives the support of Northern men! And that railroad conductor and that express agent, what shall we say of them? May the mark of CAIN rest upon them forever! They pawned their manhood for a few dollars; verily, they shall obtain their reward, if there be any virtue left in the people of Indiana!—Cleveland Leader.

Slaveholders' Convention.--Emancipation in Kentucky.

It has been proposed to us by several gentlemen who own slaves in Kentucky, that they (the slaveholders) hold a convention at Frankfort, to adopt some plan for the abolition of slavery, and that we so announce it; and that Hon. W. H. Luke of Pendleton county, a slaveholder, be appointed by the friends of the convention as one in this part of the State to draw up a proposition for its gradual abolition.—Newport (Ky.) News.

Cuban Slave Trade.

It is stated that contracts have been made for the introduction, this year, into the island of Cuba, of a large number of African slaves. One party alone has contracted for the supply of seven thousand. Portuguese agents, it is said are now in New York, making the necessary arrangements.

The Steamship Persia.

The new steamship for the Cunard line—the Persia, of 3800 tons—is now being fitted up in the Clyde, near Glasgow. They call her the largest ship afloat, being 396 feet in length, and her paddle wheels are 36 feet in diameter. Her cost when completed, may be about £150,000.

NORFOLK, Wed. Sept. 12, 1855.

I have only time to state that the mortality is very great—many new cases, and many deaths in various parts of the city. Mrs. Geo. Loyall, lady of the Navy Agent; Robert Timberlake, son-in-law of Mr. Gordon, the Banker; Richard Granbury and two sons; Mrs. Harrison, sister of Capt. Fatherly; Jno. S. Lovett, Attorney-at Law; Rev. L. Walkis's lady; Rev. Mr. Will's son; Dr. J. Briggs; Mrs. Catherine Baylor and three daughters; and many others dead.

Several hundred others are very sick of the disease. Fifty burials yesterday; nearly five hundred interments in Cedar Grove and Elmwood Cemeteries alone, in 11 days! About 1700 deaths in all, of the fever. A fearful mortality in so small a population. Very many colored persons are down, and numbers die.

Dealing with the Dead.

The Norfolk correspondent of the Petersburg Express, under date of the 5th, says:—

The hearses not being sufficient to carry out the coffins for interment, recourse is had to carts and wagons, and in several instances we have seen the dismal shell of mortality protruding far out from the front of the cart, with the driver sitting beside it with perfect nonchalance, cracking his whip and puffing away at an abominable cheroot! 'How use doth breed a habit in a man!'

The negroes hold divine service in their different churches every day, and incessant praying and singing may be heard from morning to night. The whole week seems one continued Sunday, and one's brain is crazed by the upsetting of the regular routine of former every day life. We seem to be in a different world, with nothing to do but to walk about with one's hands in one's pockets, and see burials! burials!

A remarkable circumstance connected with the epidemic is, that not a bird is to be seen within the city, not since the fever became general. Whether this is owing to the poisonous density of the atmosphere that keeps them away, or from what other cause, we are not able to say, not being philosophers or ornithologists enough to solve the phenomenon.

The cows, in despite of the city ordinance, wander about the city, seemingly in search of lost mates, making the welkin echo with their melancholy lowing; while gangs of half famished dogs take possession of the streets after nightfall, and render 'night hideous' by their incessant yelping and howling! Truly, the very acme of distress and desolation has fallen upon poor Norfolk!

There is a great scarcity of coffins. The names of the applicants are put down in regular order as they come, and so served. The eagerness with which the applicants press their claims is horribly ludicrous, and yet not to be wondered at when we take into consideration the fact that many have friends and relations lying dead at home, who have been lying in their beds two days, or more, awaiting a box or coffin to be buried in!

Fugitive Slave Case.

A young negro man, escaped from his owner in Kentucky, some months ago, and after the usual dangers and narrow escapes, arrived safely in Chicago, where he has remained. His master at length obtained information which led him to believe that the runaway was here, and at once made up his mind to come and catch him.

The Kentuckian, accompanied by some of his friends, arrived here on Monday night, and yesterday morning he met his slave! The recognition was mutual, and instantaneous. Neither party stood upon the order of going, but went at once, the to swear out the necessary papers for the recapture of his slave, while the negro, in less than an hour, was on his way to Canada.—Chicago Tribune.

Arrival of the "America."

GLORIOUS NEWS!!

SEBASTOPOL IS TAKEN!!!

HALIFAX, 27th Sept., 1855.

The Steam Ship America, Capt. Lang, from Liverpool, Sept. 16th, arrived here this a. m., she brings Liverpool dates to the 16th, one week later.

Sebastopol is taken.

French loss 15,000, including 5 Generals.

English loss 2,000.

The news is the highest degree important, Sebastopol having at last fallen.

The Bombardment commenced on the 5th, and continued without interruption until the 8th, when the assault commenced.

The French attacked the Malakoff and Careening and the English the Redan. Six repulses were sustained by the the French before the Malakoff, but on the 7th they carried the work in splended style, and hoisted their Eagle on the Malakoff. The slaughter was terrible and is estimated at 2,000 English, and 15,000 French and as many Russians, making the aggregate upwards of 30,000 men.

Five French Generals are reported to have been killed, including Bosquet.

During the night succeeding the assault, the Russians evacuated the entire Southside of Sebastopol, first blowing up their defences and sinking their ships and firing the Town, and leaving nothing but smouldering ruins. A large allied force were marching along the coast to intercept the retreat of the Russians inland.

The Allies found immense materials of war in Sebastopol.

It is reported instructions had been sent to the allied Generals, in the event of Gortschakoff seeking to capitulate, to demand that Russia shall surrender, at discretion all the troops, stores and fortified places, including Odessa.

Another unsuccessful attempt had been made on the life of Louis Napoleon.

The London money market was more stringent, the Bank of England had advanced minimum rate to 4½ per cent, and a further advance to 5 per cent, was expected.

Wheat was quoted 1s. higher per quarter.

The weather had been favourable. Accounts satisfactory. Breadstuffs generally dull, and prices had underwent no material change.

Provisions unchanged.

Sugar further advanced to 21s.

Symptoms of Revolution.

The London, Letter of the New York Commercial Advertiser has the following in relation to apprehended troubles in Central Europe.

Within the last month or two, the position of Germany has attracted increased attention. It is now generally admitted that the predictions of Kossuth with regard to the treacherons intentions of Austria have been fulfilled almost to the letter, and this has excited proportionate hopes among the multitude of Polish, German and Hungarian refugees, who have long looked anxiously for the war to take a turn that would extend it beyond the Turkish question to a general struggle between the principles of despotism and liberty. Whether the people of the continent, disciplined by adversity, are more prepared to enter into such a contest than in 1848, is an anxious question, but there are many observers who still have strong hopes for Italy, Hungary and Prussia. Meanewhile the German governments, with their usual infatuation, are doing their best to provoke a new outbreak. The King of Hanover is endeavoring to annul the constitution granted by his father, and, although the Hanoverian people, not only throughout the contest of 1848, which plunged all the surrounding States into anarchy, but ever since that period, has been such as might serve as an example to all patriotic, order loving communities, he has actually had the madness to appeal to the German Bund for support in carrying out his design. That the eagerness of this body to effect the suppression of liberty in possession of one of its members is more intense than ever, can not be doubted; but the question is whether their folly will induce them at the present crisis to run the risk of marching in troops to overthrow the Hanoverians, and, perhaps, to sound the first note of a new and general battle that none of them may live to see ended. Be this as it may, there are palpable signs of growing fermentation throughout Germany, and it is also said that large reliefs and reinforcements have been demanded by Radetzky in Lombardy. Dread lest the Polish and Hungarian refugees should be employed on the Baltic coast against Russia is likewise spreading uneasiness not only in St. Petersburg but at Vienna. The Russian Government, however, have had the tact to grant some pretended concessions to Poland in order to weaken the danger, but the Austrian Cabinet, with their traditionary monomania, meet every sign of this kind only by a resort to new oppressions.

The Queen of England at the Tomb of Napoleon.

The Queen visited, the day before yesterday, the tomb of the Emperor. No one of her visits produced a deeper impression. As the review had lasted till very late, her Majesty was no longer expected at the Hotel des Invalides; nevertheless she determined on going there, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour. The Queen consequently arrived at nightfall, followed by a numerous staff, surrounded by the veterans of our old wars, who had hastened to meet her, while she advanced with noble composure towards the last resting place of him who was England's most constant adversary.

What a spectacle! How many remembrances, with all the contrasts they brought up to the mind!

But when by the light of torches, the organ playing "God save the Queen," her Majesty was led by the Emperor to the chapel where the remains of Napoleon lie, the effect was overpowering and immense, the emotion profound, for every one was reflecting that this was no ordinary homage offered at the tomb of a great man, but a solemn act, attesting that the rivalries of the past were forgotten, and that now the union between the two peoples had received its most signal consecration.

Lake Superior Region.

From reliable sources we learn that the production of copper this season will be about 5,000 tons, mine weight amounting, to say 3,500 tons of ingot copper, being fully one-seventeenth of the entire product of the world.

The result is unexampled when we consider that mining in earnest, viz.: the exploitation of the copper, has been vigorously prosecuted for about five years only, and that the previous copper stock speculations were greatly injurious to the business of legitimate mining.

As a whole, the Lake Superior mines have been much more productive and profitable for the number engaged in them, than the Cornwall and Deven mines, though the latter have had the immense advantage of abundant labor, unlimited capital, of the experience of centuries in practical mining, and of operating in the heart of a country furnishing plenty of cheap supplies. And should the total production of the Lake Superior mines increase as it has during the past twelve months, in a very few years they will produce more copper than the English mines.

During the past season, considerable machinery has been put up, among which are many new stamping mills. The force employed will be much increased, and several mines which had nearly suspended will be pushed forward vigorously.

The product of another year will, therefore, in all probability, be much greater than that of the present. The value of copper for the present year will be about $1,750,000. Another year it will probably reach $2,500,000.—Chicago Tribune,

Brock's Monument.

The new monument to the memory of the illustrious General Brock, on Queenston Heights, is now raised to about 140 ft. high, and the workmen are at present busy with the fine Corinthian shaft. This, with the crowning entablature of the column, will probably be completed this fall; though the entire work will not be finished before next summer. There will be but one column in the world superior in height to Brock's monument, and probably not one exceeding it in beauty and position. The ground in the neighbourhood of the column is covered with massive peices of work, some statues of warriors, lions, and elaborately carved work, they are to adorn the cornice of the pedestal capital and entablature of the column; among these stands a colossal statue of General Brock, seventeen feet in height, which will be placed on the top of all. These figures are cut out of the same kind of stone which forms the monument, and are executed in a bold and flowing style, that will give an aspect of much animation to the monument. They reflect much credit indeed, upon the architect and workmen engaged.

This magnificent column will be an ornament to the Province, and a fitting testimonial of a people grateful to the memory of the most beloved Governor and victorious defender of Upper Canada, and who gave his life for her security. In comparing the monument now constructing, with the old one, we could almost thank the infamous Lett, for having been the occasion of so noble a work being erected on the battle ground at Queenston.—Niagara Mail.

Important Invention to Printers.

Mr. Samuel Weed, an ingenious mechanic of this town (Middlesex, Mass.,) has invented a machine for making printers' types, embossing and embellishing types of all descriptions, of steel, iron, brass, copper, and type metal, at an expense less than that of the types made in the ordinary mode of casting. The importance of this invention will be fully appreciated by printers and the craft generally. Human ingenuity has to the present been unable to form any metal, or combination of metals, from which perfect types can be cast. The best that has been found, and which is in general use, is formed of lead and antimony in proportions of three of the first to one of the last, called "type metal." This is found to cast a more perfect figure or letter than any thing else. Yet this is subject to great imperfections, to wit: that of complete form to the matrix or mold, a latent and therefore irremidable defect, as all metals will expand by heat and contract by cold. But the greatest objection arises from the exceeding softness of the metal; from the constant handling of all types there is an attrition or wearing which every printer well knows renders worthless a font of the best type. In addition to that, the acid for cleansing off ink corrodes, and of itself soon renders them worthless. In Mr. Weed's invention these great difficulties are superseded, and types, as beautiful as human ingenuity can form, are made of any malleable metal. This valuable invention has been the result of several years' study and many experiments. We have before us several specimens of types, perfectly formed and symmetrical, made of copper, brass, and iron. There is, therefore no further experiment to be made to test its ability or usefulness. The object sought for is obtained—the secret is found. It is justly one of the most important inventions of the age. A patent has been applied for in this country and in Europe.—Middlesex (Mass.) Journal.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.
IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.
GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your town, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?
"Yes sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, rear of Smith' Grocery, it is the place; he'll accommodate you as well as satisfactorily."
"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"
"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."
"Where did you say I could find him?"
"Why, in the rear of Smith's Grocery, King Street East; any person can tell you."
"Will you conduct me there?"
"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work, so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."
"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."
"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."
"Then I must try him."
"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."
"Come, let's go."
"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"
"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."
"Then that's the place, for his motto reads—
Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

THE CANADA
LIFE ASSURANCE
COMPANY.
INCORPORATED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT
CAPITAL $200,000.
HUGH C. BAKER, Esq., President.
JOHN YOUNG, Esq., Vice-President.
ASSURANCES may be effected in this Company on single or joint lives, or on the contingency of one life surviving another; for the whole term of life, or for a limited period; by a single payment, or a limited number of payments; or annual payments only ceasing at death; to secure a sum at any given age, or at death, should death occur before the attainment of that age. Endowments for children, immediate or deferred annuities, and generally any transaction contingent on the value and duration of life, may be effected in this Company.
Among the advantages offered by this, the only Life Assurance Company ever established in British North America, may be enumerated moderate and small rate of expenditures; liberal management and encouragement of claims; liberal conditions, especially in reference to lapsed policies.
Prospectuses, forms of proposal, and full information as to the prosperous condition of the Company, may be had from

CAUTION.
FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.
Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.
Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangement as colored citizens of Toronto are now said to be, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more than a miracle to continuance; and all the re-actions, owing to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.
This everlasting going whining after the fresh fish—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profit-able for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of [illegible] women who eschew a respectable line of action though it be, under this free government to gain dollars in the United States at the expense [illegible] your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there a feeling of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, in a people who, with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care and [illegible] who, whatever running such risks, [illegible] shall return on a few extra dollars?
We hope that its subject duly receive the attention its importance demands, and that the [illegible]

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave trader, are less offensive to God, less contrary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published by that Society of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the wickedness of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications" referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF "PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD," "PARLEY'S TALES," &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is detailed, is given: and to aid the reader in this study, stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological view, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being lifted out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction and interest of continuous narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and, finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He sees his work boldly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It is a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

ICE! ICE!! ICE!!!

THE Undersigned begs to return his best thanks to his Customers, for the liberal patronage he has received for the last nine years, and to announce that he has enlarged and added to the number of his ICE HOUSES, having now four, which are filled with pure and wholesome Spring Water Ice, from Yorkville. He is prepared to supply the same to Customers, by contract or otherwise, during the season, commencing from the 1st of June next. The Ice will be conveyed by waggon daily, to places within six miles of Toronto.

All orders sent to THOS F. CARY, Hairdresser, Front Street, two doors from Church Street, will be punctually attended to.

WILLIAM PERSONS.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

JOHN ALEXANDER.

BUFFALO, Feb. 21st 1853.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works, that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession, that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him capacitated to do good.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carleton, author of "One Year of Widowhood," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,

OR

The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,

A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress," &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humorous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your name as a subscriber. Specimens sent gratis, if desired.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin, in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the public, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the

Poetry.

The Perplexed Housekeeper's Soliloquy.

BY MRS F. D. GAGE.

I wish I had a dozen pairs
Of hands this very minute;
I'd soon put all these things to rights—
The very deuce is in it;
Here's a big washing to be done,
One pair of hands to do it
Sheets, shirts and stockings, coats and pants,
How will I e'er get through it?

Dinner to get for six or more,
No loaf left o'er from Sunday;
And baby cross as he can live,—
He's always so on Monday.
And there's the cream, 'tis getting sour,
I must forthwith be churning,
And here's Bob wants a button on—
Which way shall I be turning?

'Tis time the meat was in the pot,
The bread was worked for baking,
The clothes were taken from the boil—
Oh dear! the baby's waking!
Hush, baby dear! there, hush-sh-sh!
I wish he'd sleep a little,
'Till I could run and get some wood,
To hurry up that kettle.

Oh dear! oh dear if P—— comes home,
And finds things in this pother,
He'll just begin and tell me all
About his tidy mother!
How nice her kitchen used to be,
Her dinner always ready,
Exactly when the noon bell rang—
Hush, hush, dear little Freddy.

And then will come some hasty word,
Right out before I'm thinking
Then say that hasty words from wives
Set sober men to drinking
Now isn't that a great idea,
That men should take to sinning,
Because a weary, half-sick wife,
Can't always smile so winning?

When I was young, I used to earn
My living without trouble,
Had clothes and pocket money, too,
And hours of leasure double.
I never dreamed of such a fate,
When I, a lass was courted—
Wife, mother, nurse, seamstress, cook, housekeeper, chambermaid, laundress, dairy woman, and scrub generally, doing the work of six,
For the sake of being supported!

Miscellaneous.

AN INCIDENT IN REAL LIFE.

One winter evening, when "norland winds were piping" loudly, but harmlessly around the walls of our old substantial dwelling, our whole family, consisting of four persons—namely, my father and mother, my sister and myself—were sitting before a cheerful fire, enjoying that dim delicious hour that intervenes between the night and the day, ere shutters are closed, or candles placed on the table. On the present occasion, this hour was spun out to an unusual length, and yet not one of us felt inclined to have the lights brought in. My father, was peculiary animated in his narration of the various scenes he had witnessed, and our questions ever and anon stimulated him to some fresh recollection. A pause at last ensued, however; and the close of the twilight enjoyment seemed inevitable, when my sister put a question which prolonged it for a considerable time further. "What," said she, was the happiest passage, father, in your life?"

"I shall tell you, my children," said our father, "what passage in my life gives me most satisfaction in the retrospect. Soon after your mother had united her fate with mine, I fell into a respectable and profitable business in New York, where, as you are aware, that competency was earned which now enables me to pass the evening of life in comfort. The occupation which I followed required my daily presence for some hours in the centre of that city, where I met the parties with whom I had business connections. The time which I generally chose for this purpose was the hottest part of the day, when every one almost is within doors, and there was less chance of missing my object. The streets at this period of the day are often remarkably empty, only a straggler being visible here and there. It was on one of these business visits that I saw, in a back-street, two men, an Irishman and a negro, jostling, or rather struggling with each other. There was no other object in the street to divert my attention, and I therefore almost involuntarily kept my eyes fixed upon them. They were both young men, and appeared to be about equally matched. They were both muscular, and seemed to be trying to wrestle. The Irishman felt his inferiority and becoming irritated, raised his arm, and gave his opponent a tremendous blow, which [illegible] this threw himself into a defensive attitude, and on the black raising himself from the ground, blows were rapidly interchanged by the parties. All this passed almost instantaneously, and the issue was equally speedy. The negro struck his adversary on the side of the head with sufficient force to drive him to the ground. The unfortunate Irishman's head came in contact with a stone, and his skull was fractured. Within a few moments after the fall, he was dead!

"No one was near enough to witness the course of this affair but myself. A crowd, however, soon collected on the spot; and as the street was cheifly inhabited by the laboring Irish, the assemblage was principally composed of that nation. The wounded man was carried into a house to receive medical assistance, and I, losing sight of the negro, proceeded on my way home.

"My own affairs occupied so much of my time and attention, that the unhappy incident I had witnessed passed almost entirely from my mind. A few mornings after it happened, however, I was much shocked to perceive by the newspapers, that the negro had been committed to prison on a charge of willful murder, several Irishmen having sworn before the coroner, that they had seen the black strike the deceased with a stone. To give color to this assertion, one of them had the audacity to bring forward what the newspapers called 'the fatal stone.' Horrified at such villainy as this, I instantly formed the resolution of going forward at the trial, and telling the truth as I had witnessed it. Your mother and my friends attempted in vain to dissuade me, on the ground that I would inevitably incur, by such conduct, the hatred of the lower orders of the Irish, who, disappointed of their victim, might wreak their revenge on me. A sense of duty to the negro and to justice enabled me, thank Heaven, to resist these representations, though reason admitted their feasibility. 'The poor negro is, like myself, in a land of strangers,' said I; 'he is far from the hearth of his infancy, and perhaps has not one friend in the world. He is of a persecuted and despised race; and, come what may, I am resolved that he shall at least have the advantage of having the truth stated regarding the melancholy accident in which he has been involved.' Recollect, my children, that this was only my duty, and that the peculiar circumstances of the case alone gave my resolve—if, indeed, it did possess it—any merit.

"On the morning of the trial, I was in attendance at the court-house. On applying for admittance to the grant jury-room, I was informed that a true bill had been found against the negro, and that the gentlemen on the jury had given orders for their dismissal no more witnesses, being perfectly satisfied with the evidence laid before them. I was not to be put off, however, in this manner, but forced my way, almost in spite of the attending official, into the room, and after relating the whole of my story to the grand jury, was admitted as an evidence. At the same time, the true bill already found was held still as the conclusion to which these gentlemen had come, and the poor negro's life was thus left dependent on the effect of my testimony at the trial.

"The cause came on. Witness after witness swore to the same facts, until the jury were thoroughly satisfied, and the court impatient to hear the sentence pronounced against a wretch so vile as the black seemed to be. He, poor fellow, seemed more thunderstruck at the deliberate falsehoods uttered, than alarmed at his dangerous predicament. No voice was lifted up in his favour; no eye glanced on him with compassion or sympathy; friendless and hopeless, he sat like a being of an inferior kind among his fellowmen. I was called at length, and gave a plain and full statement of the facts of the case: 'That I was the only person in the street, beside the deceased and the prisoner, at the time of the occurrence; that I knew neither of the parties; that the Irishman struck the negro first, bringing him on his knees with the blow, and causing the blood to gush from his nose; that the black rose, and wiping the blood from his face with his left hand, after a short struggle, with the same hand gave the Irishman a blow on the side of the head, which drove him to the ground, where his head, striking the curbstone, was fatally injured; and that no stone could possibly be in the negro's hand without my observing it.'

"I feel pleasure, my children, in stating, for the honour of human nature, that a buzz of satisfaction ran through the court-room at the conclusion of my story. My own character and station in life, together with the total absence of interested motives, caused the entire overthrow of the previous evidence, and compassion and sympathy for the accused took the place of anger and abhorrence in every breast. The counsel for the prosecution alone, as was natural perhaps, acted as if unsatisfied. He cross-examined me very closely, and made me repeat so often the manner in which the negro struck the deceased, and with which hand he did it, that my patience became in the end exhausted, and I brought matters to a conclusion by suiting the action to the word, and applying my fist pretty smartly to the side of his own head. The solemnity of the occasion could not restrain the laughter that broke forth, and the barrister sat down, satisfied, it appeared at length, and somewhat chopfallen. The jury, without the slightest hesitation, acquitted the prisoner of the charge of murder, and returned a verdict of manslaughter. [illegible]

"Did you ever hear of the negro afterward?" interrupted my sister.

"I never saw him more than two or three times. The first time was about a month after the trial, when, in passing an oyster-shop or cellar, a voice called out: 'Massa G——! Massa G——!' I turned, and recognized in the owner of the store the unfortunate negro. His gratitude for the service which accident had enabled me to do for him, was written in every line of his countenance. He compelled me to taste a few of his oysters, and anxiously pressed me to inform him of my residence, that he might carry thither his whole stock as a present for me. 'Ah massa,' said he, 'when me stand at bar without friend, and when me saw 'pectable gentleman go in box, me tink, what! you going to hang me too! But when me heard massa speak true, me tank God for sending one gentleman to speak my cause. De blessing will be answered from de sky which poor nigger speak for Massa G——. Me could not help cry de first time many year.' And the tears ran down his cheeks as he spoke.

"This passage of my life," continued my father, "if not the happiest at the time, is at least one of the most pleasing to look back upon. And this, my children, is the best test of all happy passages in life."

"Did you suffer nothing for your behavior from those wretches of Irishmen?" asked my sister—"those vindictive—"

"Hush, Betsy," said my father; "do not vent general reflections, as I fear you were about to do, upon a nation which has shown so many great and good men in the list of her sons, and whose every error has been owing to ignorance, and, it may be, hard usage. Those Irishmen who were connected with the affair I have described, were beings who had never enjoyed opportunities of education, and their errors ought not to be assumed as a ground for general reproach to their country. You will, I hope, see such things more clearly as you grow older."

Dear little Betsy did see these things more clearly as she grew older, for she is now the happy wife of as good a man as ever lived, and he is an Irishman. Heigho! how time flies!—her eldest girl, I fear me, will make me some day soon a grandaunt!

A Tale of a Tea-Kettle.

On a winter's evening, nearly one hundred years ago, the tea-board was laid out, and the window-curtains closely drawn, in the humble parlor of a small house in the town of Greenock, in the west of Scotland. A tidy, active matron was bustling about, slicing the bread and butter; a blazing fire gleamed and roared in the grate, and curled round the black sides of the kettle, which reposed in the midst of it; and the fire crackled, and the water boiled with a faintly bubbling sound, and a stream of white vapor came whizzing out of the spout of the kettle, with a shrill cheery hiss. Now the matron aforesaid saw nothing extraordinary in all this; kettles had boiled, and fires had burned, from the beginning, and probably would do so to the end of the chapter.

As the matron stooped to pour out the boiling liquid into the tea-pot, her son James, a boy of twelve summers, sat on a low bench in front of the fire, his elbows resting on his knees, whilst his hands, placed under his chin, supported his head. The boy was intently gazing at the fire, the kettle, and the steam; swallowing them with his eyes, absorbed in deep thought, and lost in contemplation. The boy looked at the fire, and the mother looked at the boy: "Was there ever sic' an idle ne'er-d'-weel in this warl', as our Jamie?" was the question which, almost unconsciously, she proposed to herself.

A Mrs. B. ——— stepped in at this moment, when, turning to her visitor, Jamie's mother said, "Mrs. B. ———, did you ever see the like o' our Jamie? Look at him; he'll sit there for hours, staring at the kettle and the steam, till you wad think his een wad come o't o' his head!"

And, truth, to tell, there was something peculiar in the glance of the boy's eye; there was mind—active, speaking mind—looking through it. He seemed as one who gazed on a wondrous vision, and whose every sense was bound up in the display of gorgeous pageantry floating before him. He had sat watching the escaping steam until the thin vaporous column had appeared to cast itself upward in fantastic, changing shapes; sometimes the subtle fluid, gathering in force and quantity, would gently raise one side of the lid of the kettle, emit a white puff, and then let the metal fall with a low clanking sound. There was power and strength in that watery cloud; and as the dreaming boy saw this, an unbidden thought came into his mind, and he knew that the fierce struggle was symbolical of intellect warring with the elements of Providence.

And still he gazed, and saw in his day-dreams ships sailing without wind or sails, wagons propelled o'er deserts wild by some power unseen to mortal eye. "Jamie, Jamie," exclaimed his mother, "sit by to your tea. If I find ye staring at the fire again, ye'll feel the wicht o' my hand."

The boy rose meekly, and did as he was told. His name was James Watt, afterwards Sir James. He was honored with the title of knighthood, being the first who applied the powers of steam to any useful purpose.

The above anecdote is litteraly true. Watt was born in 1736. This incident occurred when he was in his twelfth year. He was the son of a poor tradesman in Greenock, and probably had never read a book—the printing presses, nautical, mechanical and agricultural implements and instruments—were introduced by men who lived, moved, and had their being where the Bible was read in churches, schools, and families. Who ever heard of a Russian serf, a German boor, or an Irish vassal producing anything beyond a measure of wheat or a peck of potatoes? When the goddess of liberty was a baby in her cradle, she was rocked to maturity in the Bible shops of Msssachusetts and Connecticut. A Burns at the plough, and a shepherd on the heather hills of Scotland, with no books save the Bible, have eclipsed Byron with all his bombast and jingle.—Laurie Todd.—Home Journal.

Arrival of the "Washington."

New York, September 27.

The steamer Washington from Bremen, via Southampton, September 12th, with 240 passengers, arrived at this port this evening.

We have accounts of the fall of Sebastopol.

On the 8th instant, the Allies attacked the defences, which were carried after a desperate resistance.

In the night the Russians in despair began to sink their ships and blow up their magazines, and in the morning Sebastopol was evacuated.

The communication between the northern parts of the town was broken off.

Sebastopol is in the possession of the Allies. The Russians, during the night and morning, evacuated the south side, after blowing up the magazines and setting fire to the whole town. All the men-of-war were burned during the night, with the exception of three steamers, which were plying about the harbour. The bridge communicating with the north side is broken.

General Simpson reports the casualties in the attempt on the Redan as somewhat heavy, but there was no general officers killed. The English loss in the assault of the Redan is estimated at about 2,000 killed and wounded.

The plan of the battle appears to have been as follows:—

"The place was attacked in four directions. The British troops attempted the storming of the Redan, the French attacked the Malakhoff. The extreme right of the French made a diversion on the Little Redan, and a united attack of the English, French and Sardinians was made on the Central Battery. All the attacks were made simultaneously, with great spirit and energy; but the one which was eminently successful was led by General Bosquet and General M'Mahon on the Malakhoff. Both the Redan and the Central Bastion were at times in the hands of the storming parties; but so accurately did the guns of the Russians cover these that though the English gained posession of them, it was found impossible for them to hold them."

The official telegraphic despatches placed in their order as to time, give a clear conception of the whole affair.

The Bombardment.

The following despatches to the British Minister of War, gave the first hint of what was proceeding:—

"Crimea, Sept. 6, 10, p.m.

"Our fire against the place continues under favourable circumstances. Our losses are extremely small. Nothing new on the Tchernaya lines. The enemy contemplate no movement there."

"Crimea, Sept. 7, 10, p.m.

"The fire of our artillery has been kept up for the last twenty-four hours. A French bomb set on fire a Russian frigate, which is still burning."

Continuation of the Bombardment.

War Department.

Lord Panmure has received the following intelligence from General Simpson, dated Crimea, Sept. 8:—

"Another Russian frigate was destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon in the Great Harbor of Sebastopol. A large fire is burning this morning about the middle of the town of Sebastopol. Last night about five minutes past one o'clock, a great explosion took place, supposed to have been one of the enemy's magazines on the north side."

The Malakhoff Taken.

War Department.

Lord Panmure has received the following intelligence from Gen. Simpson, dated Crimea, Sept. 8, 11.35 p.m.:—

"The Allied forces attacked the defences of Sebastopol this day, at 12 o'clock. The assault on the Malakhoff has been successful, and the work is in possession of the French. The attack of the English against the Redan did not succeed."

Karabelnaia Blown Up.

A supplement of the Paris Moniteur of 10th, contained the following despatch from General Pelissier to the French minister at war:—

"Redoubt Brancion, Sept. 9, 3 a.m.

"Karabelnaia and the south part of Sebastopol no longer exist. The enemy, seeing our solid occupation at Malakhoff, decided on evacuating the place, after having laid it in ruins, and blown up, by mining, al-see it must be the same in front of our attacks on the left. This immense success does the greatest honour to our troops. I will give you the details of our losses of the day, which after so many obstinate combats, cannot be otherwise than serious. To-morrow I shall be able to give you exactly the result of this great day of which Generals Bosquet and MacMahon have in great part the honour. All is quiet on the Tchernaya. We are keeping a look out there."

The Sea Attack.

Vice Admiral Bruat sent the following despatch to the French Minister of Marine:

"Crimea, Sept. 9, 10.15 a.m.

"The assault upon the Malakhoff Tower was made yesterday at noon, and later on the Great Redan and on the Central Bastion.

"A gale from the north kept the ships at anchor. The mortar boats, to be enabled to fire, were obliged to enter Streletzka Bay. They fired 600 shells against the Quarantine Bastion and Fort Alexander. The six English mortar boats, also at anchor in Streletzka Bay, fired about the same number of shells.

"Last night violent explosions and vast conflagrations made us suppose that the Russians were evacuating the town. To day we ascertained that the Russian vessels had been sunk. The bridge was covered with troops retreating to the north side. After 8 o'clock the bridge was destroyed. Only a few steamers remain in the port, anchored near Fort Catherine.

"I approached this morning the Quarantine batteries on board the Brandon, and ascertained myself that they are now evacuated. They have just blown up.

"Our soldiers have left their trenches and spread themselves in isolated groups on the ramparts of the town, which appears to be completely abandoned.

Destruction of Sebastopol.

The following telegraphic despatch received by Lord Panmure, from General Simpson, appeared in the English morning journals of the 11th instant:—

Sebastopol is in the possession of the Allies. The enemy during the night and morning evacuated the south side after exploding their magazines and setting fire to the whole of the town. All the men of war were burnt during the night, with the exception of three steamers which were plying about the harbor. The bridge communicating with the north side is broken. General Simpson reports that the casualties in the attempt on the Redan are somewhat heavy, but there were no general officers killed.

The following despatch was received from General Pelissier:—

Crimea, Sept. 9, 8 p.m.

"I have ascertained this day that the enemy have sunk his steamers. His work of destruction has continued under the fire of our shells. Mines exploding successively and on many points impose on me the duty of postponing my entry into the place, which presents only one vast scene of conflagration. Nevertheless, hemmed in closely by our fire, Prince Gortschakoff demands an armistice, in order to remove his wounded near the Fort St. Paul, the bridge having, as a measure of precaution, been destroyed by his orders. I am collecting the account of our loss, and you shall have the numbers so soon as they are made known to me. Everything goes on well. We are watching the Tchernaya."

The Russian Account.

Prince Grotschakoff's official despatches is as follows:—

Sebastopol, Sept. 9, 8 p.m.

The enemy receives constantly reinforcements of fresh troops. The bombardment is fiercely violent.

10 at Night.

The garrison of Sebastopol, after sustaining an infernal fire (feu d'enfer,) repulsed six assaults, but could not drive the enemy from the Kornileff Bastion (the Malakhoff Tower.) Our brave troops, who resisted to the last extremity, are now crossing over to the northern part of Sebastopol. The enemy found nothing in the southern part but blood-stained ruins. On the 9th of September the passage of the garrison from the southern to the northern part was accomplished with extraordinary success, our loss on that occasion being but 100 men. We left, I regret to say, nearly 500 men grieviously wounded on the southern side.

Latest by Telegraph from London to Liverpool.

London, Saturday, a.m., Sept. 15.

A Paris correspondent says, it is reported that 25,000 men have embarked at Balaklava, for the north of Sebastopol, also that the Russians are in full retreat towards Perekop.

The Paris Debats has an editorial, discussing whether Sebastopol is tenable by the Allies, while the Russians are masters of the forts on the North side fronting the sea, and asserts that it is quite tenable, the position of Fort Cherson and Balaklava superseding the necessity of entering the harbor.

The Russian army will probably continue in observation within their strong positions until the allies make some movement, hence all speculation as to the plan of the campaign must be imaginary.

Paris, Monday, Sept. 10, 7 a.m.

The Moniteur announces that the Minister of War has just received the following despatch, dated Varna, Sept. 9, 3.35 a.m.

The assault on the Malakhoff was made yesterday at noon. Its redoubts and the

We immediately occupied ourselves in lodging ourselves there. We succeeded in doing so at Malakhoff. The Redan of Careening Bay was not tenable owing to the heavy fire of artillery which was poured upon the first occupiers of that work. Our solid installation at Malakhoff cannot fail soon to make it surrender, as also the Redan, of which our brave allies carried the salient with their usual vigour. But, as was the case at the Redan of Careening Bay, they were obliged to give way before the enemy's artillery and powerful reserves.

On beholding our eagles floating on the Malakhoff, General de Salles made two attacks on the Central Bastion. They did not succeed. Our troops returned to their trenches. Our losses are serious, and I cannot yet send a precise return. They are amply compensated for, as the capture of the Malakhoff is a success, the consequences of which are immense.

Pellissier subsequently reports, Sept. 10th, 11 p.m.:—I inspected Sebastopol to-day, and its line of defence. The mind cannot form an exact picture of our victory, the full extent of which can only be understood by personal inspection. The multiplicity of the works, and the material means applied to them, exceeds by far any hitherto seen in the history of war. The enemy have left in the hands of the Allies an amount of material, and immense establishments, the importance of which it is impossible to state exactly. To-morrow, the allied troops will occupy the Karabelnaia, and the town will be placed under the protection of an Anglo French commission.

From the London Times, Sept. 11.

The Fall of Sebastopol.

On Saturday, the 8th day of September, within a few days of the anniversary of the landing of the allied forces in the Crimea, and 316 days after the opening of the besieging batteries against Sebastopol, on the 17th of October, 1854, a final and victorious assault was made upon the southern part of the town. Before night the French flag waved in triumph upon the Malakoff tower, which had fallen before the indomitable courage and perseverance of the assailants, and within a few hours more the Russian garrison had evacuated the Karabelnaia suburb and the southern portion of the fortress, after blowing up the magazines and principal works, setting fire to the town in many places, and then endeavoring to withdraw by the bridge across the harbour from this terrific scene of devastation and defeat. So fell Sebastopol.

The catastrophe surpasses in horrible interest all the preceding scenes of this gigantic contest. The columns of the allied armies, combined in a fourfold attack, struggled all the day with equal valor, though with unequal success, against the principal points marked out for assault. The extreme right of the French attack was directed against the work called the Little Redan, which was at first carried by the impetuosity of our allies, though they were subsequently driven back by the fierce resistance of the Russians. The second and principal assault of the French army was against the Malakhoff, which was carried by storm, and determined by its fall the fate, not only of the day but of the siege. A third attack was made by the British forces on the Great Redan, and although we learn that the salient angle of this formidable work was at one moment carried and occupied by our troops, it must be added that they were subsequently driven out of it by the fire of the Russian batteries which commanded it, and this check in some degree diminishes the exultation which will be felt in this country at the triumphant termination of the siege. The French columns on the left also assailed, in the fourth place, the Central Battery, but failed to establish themselves in the work. We have no doubt that every man who attacked the defences of Sebastopol on that eventful day fought with the same undaunted gallantry and the same determination to carry the place or to perish in the attempt; and, although the results of these several attacks were unequal, all were animated by the same spirit and contributed to the great result. The first praise of this glorious victory belongs of right to our gallant allies the French, since the Malakhoff tower, the key of the main position, fell before the vigor of their assault; but, with that chivalrous feeling which is the noblest bond of men who have fought and conquered together, the names of all of those who carried the rugged defences of Sebastopol deserve to stand side by side on one page, and no invidious distinctions shall sully or lessen their common renown.

The Russians on their side unquestionably defended the place with the utmost determination, and on more than one point they had the advantage of the besiegers. But it was the courage of despera tion, for this effort was their last. No sooner were the outer works taken, which laid the town and the port at the mercy of the allied forces, than the men-of-war and steamers in the harbour were all set on fire, blown up, sunk, or destroyed, either by the fire of the allied batteries or by the orders of the Russian authorities.

Such was the fate of the Russian Black Sea fleet, on which the Imperial Government had expended incalculable sums of money and incessant labor—that fleet which two years ago threatened the very existence of the Turkish empire, but whose solitary naval achievement was the atrocious outrage upon a far inferior force at Sinope. Of the authors of that nefarious attack what remains? The Emperor Nicholas sleeps in commanded and the crews who fought on that occasion, have most of them fallen in the batteries of Sebastopol. The very ships for which Russia contended at the Conferences of Vienna as essential to her dignity and power, are torn plank from plank and scattered upon the waves.

The dockyard and arsenal were already on Sunday, in possession of the allied troops; Prince Gortschakoff had, it seems, solicited an armistice, though we know not whether it was granted; but his troops were hurrying away with the utmost precipitation; and considering the moral and physical result of such a defeat upon the remnant of his army, it may be doubted whether the Russian General can attempt to make any further stand on the north side of the harbour.

These great events terminate the seige of Sebastopol, properly so called, for the allied armies have achieved within the last three days the grand object of their enterprise. They have wrested from the whole military power of Russia a fortress which she had converted into a place of extraordinary strength and defended with innumerable hosts of her best troops. They have annihilated the naval power on which she relied to secure her supremacy in the Euxine, and to establish her authority from the shores of the Caucausus to the mouths of the Danube. But above all, they have shown the servile and credulous nations of the East that the Powers paramount in the world, are not those of liberty and of civilzation. To reduce it by force of arms was to overthrow that collossal fabric of Russian influence which a century and a half of rapine and intrigue had called into being, until it overawed the surrounding nations and threatened the independence of Europe. While the expedition to the Crimea offered the incalculable advantage of circumscribing within a few square miles of the enemy's territory all the horrors of war, and staking the strength of four empires on a single point, the result of our victory is as boundless as the globe. It tells the world that the alliance of England and of France has stood the test of warfare by the sufferings of the camp and the perils of the field. It assures mankind that their united policy can impose its will and execute its resolutions, even though the timid stand aloof, and though men of baser minds may abandon the cause of their country in her hour of need.

We owe our success, in no slight degree, to the unwavering firmness with which the Emperor of the French has pursued this enterprise, and adhered to the policy that dictated it. But we owe it no less to the clear and unanimous resolution of the people of England, whose mind was made up that this thing was to be done.

In the course of these events, which broke in so suddenly on our wonted avocations, we have had much to learn, and much to bear. At times, the tedium of suspended excitement became almost intolerable; and more than once, the fainthearted or the factious lost confidence in the result. Yet, what is the fact? What is it we have done? A year has not yet elapsed since the allied armies set foot in the Crimea. Within that time, they have won three pitched battles, and twice assaulted a fortress of extraordinary magnitude. They have encompassed the works of the enemy with trenches, extending over more than thirty miles of ground; they have armed these trenches with the heaviest ordinance, and kept up so incessant fire, that not only an incalculable amount of projectiles has been consumed but five or six siege trains have been worn out. They have created at Kamiesch, Eupatoria, and Yenikale, three military stations, which the Russians have not dared to assail; and Balaklava has become a populous mart. A railroad connects the harbour and the camp; an electric chain binds the Crimea to Europe, and conveys to us in a few hours the tidings of these triumphant successes. Upwards of 200,000 men, encamped within the lines of the Tchernnya, have been conveyed thither, and are daily fed, clothed, and housed, from the resources of Western Europe. All this has been effected in spite of the rigour of winter, the heat of summer, and the distance of 3000 miles from our shores; and within one little year from the sailing of the expedition, the leading objects of the campaign are accomplished, and Sebastopol is in our power!

The military and political results of this event open a new chapter in the history of these transactions, to which we shall shortly take occasion to revert, but, be they what they may, the grand fact now before us, justifies the confidence we have never ceased to feel and rewards our hopes—for within twelve months from the commencement of this enterprise Sebastopol has fallen and the power of Russia in the waters of the Euxine is at an end.

Important Operations in the Sea of Azoff.

The French Minister of Marine has received from Vice-Admiral Bruat the following despatch:—

THE CRIMEA, Sept, 6, 1855.

Captain Huchet de Cintre, of the Milan, announces to me that the Milan and the Gaton have destroyed in the sea of Azoff, between Temriank and Dolga, 43 fishing establishments, 127 boats, several thousand nets, tar, salt, and immense numbers of barrels; four fishing establishments have alone escaped destruction, the shallowness of the water having prevented our vessels from approaching them. The damage done to the enemy may be estimated at several million of frances. The fisheries in the sea of Azoff create a considerable traffic, which extends as far as Poland. The destruction now effected will render that traffic impossible this year.

Commander Cloue, of the "Brandon," has joined Commander Osborne, of the "Vesuvius," for the purpose of ascending the Gulf of Ouklouk with boats, and burning the stores of fodder collected on the coast. All the commanders of our vessels speak highly of the excellent relations existing between them and Captain Osborne.

Secret Treaty between the Allies and Dominica.

England and France are not so fully occupied by Russia but they can find time to watch Brother Jonathan, and keep control of the gates of the Pacific trade. A reliable correspondent in Madrid assures us that a private treaty has been made by France, England and Spain with the Dominican government, in which the latter, for a certain consideration, has pledged itself to the following conditions:

No settlers from the United States of any

No land for mining purposes, factories, or coal depots, shall be sold, leased or ceded, either to private companies or to the American government, without the prior consent of the French and British governments.—N. Y. Herald.

NOTICE.

The Shareholders and Managers of the PROVINCIAL FREEMAN are requested to meet at Chatham, on the last Tuesday in October, without fail.

By order.

M. A. SHADD,
Agent.

PROVINCIAL FREEMAN.

CHATHAM, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1855.

☞ DR. JESSE BURKE is authorized to receive Subscriptions for this paper, and to give Receipts for the same.

☞ MR. MOSES VINEY is authorized to act as Agent for this paper in the State of New York.

☞ Rev. R. M. JOHNSON, is authorized to receive subscriptions for this paper.

☞ REV. RICHARD PRESTON, of Halifax, N.S., is authorized to act as Agent, to receive Monies, and give receipts for the same.

☞ Rev. W. DOUGLASS is authorized to receive Subscriptions for the Provincial Freeman, and give Receipts for the same.

It is no longer a question to be asked, whether "THE PROVINCIAL FREEMAN" is needed, as a means of elevating our people of this Province, and as an instrument of defence to them. That question has long since been decided, in view of our condition, and the neglect of our interest, by the different journals of this country, not only by our own people, but also, by very many of our white fellow citizens and numerous friends, in the "United States," who are the patrons of the paper.

So much being true, it must be the duty not only of the colored people, but also of the whites, to give the paper a liberal support! Our obligation to the cause of piety, our obligation to the interest of man, and our obligation to the welfare of the country, all demand it.

It is true that the subscription list of the paper is quite large, but a large subscription list will not support the paper, if the subscription is left unpaid. The Publishing Agent has reminded us of the fact, that monies due to the office come into it very slowly indeed. Let us say to our subscribers who are in arrears: dear friends, we must have what is due us for the paper, and that immediately. Our expenses are very heavy, and must be met weekly; and how can we do it, unless YOU WILL PAY WHAT YOU OWE US? We hope you will not make it necessary for us to erase your name from our subscription book, by continuing to neglect to settle your bill. We must be plain. We shall have to come to the cash system. We cannot, and will not, continue to buy paper and ink for you, and pay your printer "to boot," and other daily expenses, connected with the office, if you do not, at once, send to Isaac D. Shadd, Esq., Publishing Agent, at Chatham, C. W., what is due to the Provincial Freeman, from you. We know that the times are hard, and money scarce, and hence, we have been patient, and we are disposed to be so still, but "there is a point, beyond which, patience would be a virtue." It would be no virtue to allow you—our non-paying subscribers, to involve the establishment and ruin the paper. But that it may be as easy as possible for our country friends, who cannot always get money, we will take such things in payment, as they have to dispose of, at market price, provided they are delivered at the office, in Chatham, or at the depository of our Agents. There are none of our subscribers, who are farmers in this part of the country, who cannot square their account with us now,—either with their "hog and hominy," their bread and cheese, and wood, or the winged tribe. But remember, we would much rather have the cash!

To our friends who are not subscribers, but who aid the paper by their donations, allow us to say, we truly thank you for your liberality and kindness, and hope you will continue to remember us. We do not say so much, because, we would beg you for aid. We are absolutely opposed to begging, but if you deem it to be your duty to help to sustain the paper, because of the good it must do the cause of wronged humanity, then we receive your aid gratefully; but permit us to say, we rather you should, and hope you will order the paper to be sent to some poor friend, or rich enemy, to the full value of the amount you send us. We would be glad to send, by your order, at least one thousand numbers of the Freeman, weekly, to the enemies of the colored people, of this country and the "United States." Shall we not, on your account, furnish certain hotels, and steamboats, with the paper? Who will order volume II, to be sent to each Director of the E. W. Railway? We much rather you should do this than to give us your money! We believe the paper can, and ought to sustain itself, and we are determined to make it do so, if possible, and we earnestly entreat you to aid us the colored people of this country. We do not ask your aid that any of the parties attached to it, may make money, for God knows, some of us are working to sustain it, for no reward, while others hardly get their bread and cheese from it.

We need at least FIVE THOUSAND subscribers to make the paper what it ought to be, and to pay for services rendered it. We ask you, friends, shall we have such a number? Will not every subscriber become an Agent, and secure, at least, ONE new subscriber for us, and send us the money in advance? We appeal particularly to our own people, for they will be the sufferers, should the paper fail. What paper in all this country speaks right out for the absolute rights of the colored people, but the Provincial Freeman? Is there one that does? No, not one!

Let our brethren in the Christian Ministry consider the need there is of the Freeman among us—our Methodist brethren and our Baptist brethren. How shall we defend ourselves and our people, against such abuse as one of our ministers received the other night, at the hands of the slaveholder's tool, on the steamer of the "Great Western Railway," if the Freeman should fail?

Let our sisters throughout the country go to work, on behalf of the defender of their rights—"the Provincial Freeman. Reader, what can you do? What will you do? Will you pray for our success? We shall look and listen!

A Visit to the Elgin Settlement.

In company with several friends, both male and female, I paid a visit lately to the "Elgin Settlement;" and although expecting much, I was not prepared to find matters in such a flourishing condition. The readers of the Globe are already partially acquainted with the history of this settlement. At different periods, attempts were made to improve the physical and social condition of the colored persons, who, having escaped from the despotism of the United States Republic, sought an asylum and a home on the free soil of monarchical Britain. Settlements were formed in different localities, but, from some cause or other, none of them prospered long, difficulties arose, and it began to be surmised that the black man was an intractable sort of being, incapable of improvement under any management, and especially, that as a tiller of the soil he was utterly useless. Several benevolent gentlemen having deliberated over the matter, came to the conclusion that the experiment had not been fairly and fully tested; that there were peculiar circumstances which operated prejudiciously in the previous case, and that at least another effort should be made on a proper scale, and with suitable instrumentalities. Accordingly, about 1848, certain individuals in Toronto, Hamilton and elsewhere, formed themselves into an "Association for the settlement and moral improvement of the colored population of Canada," procured an Act of incorporation from the Legislature, and, with the aid of the Rev. William King, set themselves to work out in earnest the contemplated scheme. With this object in view, about nine thousand acres of land were selected in the township of Raleigh, in the county of Kent; and on the 22nd October, 1849, some 4,300 acres of this block were secured from Government. Since that time additional purchases have been made; and the settlement is now six miles long by about three miles wide. The lands were divided into lots of fifty acres each, and are sold only to actual colored settlers of approved moral character at the rate of $2½ per acre. The first instalment has to be paid down at the time of purchase, and the balance in nine equal annual instalments, with interest.

On the 3rd December, 1849, the first settler entered upon this land, and from that time to the present, yearly additions have been made, so that almost the whole of the land has been occupied by actual settlers. The houses are all erected on a uniform plan, after a certain model. They stand about 33 feet distant from a road 66 feet wide, which runs past each lot, and are built of round logs, 18 by 24 feet, and 12 feet high, with a gallery running along the length of the front. The space between the house and the road tastefully laid out in grass plots or planted with shrubbery, the whole, together with a small garden at the end of each house, being surrounded by a picket fence. While none may build houses inferior to the model, all may surpass it as far as they please. Several have availed themselves of this license, and have constructed larger and more commodious dwellings. The first house that attracted our attention, on entering the settlement, was a two story brick one, which was built by Alfred H. Mest, and is kept by him as a hotel on Temperance principles. Passing this, we soon arrived at the Mission Church and School House, small, neat buildings, somewhat like porter lodges at the entrance of the avenue leading up to the dwelling house of the Rev. Mr. King, who resides on the premises, superintending and guiding all the affairs of the settlement. Acting both in a civil and ecclesiastical capacity, he is the moving spirit who keeps all the parts of the machine, so to speak, in harmonious working. He is regarded throughout the settlement as the King whom all are bound to obey, and to judge from what I witnessed, the obedience of the settlers was no less implicit than their confidence and respect were sincere and profound.

In order that education and morality might progress pari passu with the physical improvement around, a school house and church were erected at the very commencement of the settlement, and both, I am glad to find, have been regularly and well attended throughout. Several of the colored children, of whom 150 have been attending school during the year, have made very creditable progress in their studies, and some of them can translate Latin and Greek with considerable facility. The girls are studying music and to hear the notes of the piano-forte under such circumstances was as pleasing as it was unexpected. The church is under the pastoral care of Mr. King, who is paid by the Free Church of Canada. The moral condition of Buxton is good. Nothing that intoxicates is made or sold on the lands. The Sabbath, I am informed, is generally observed as a day of rest, and peace and harmony reign throughout. The first sounds that greeted our ears, were those of prayer and praise, a weekly prayer meeting being held in the minister's house—on these occasions there is generally a good attendance.

In company with Mr. King I visited as much of the lands as my time would permit and with all I saw, I was higly gratified. During the past year a new steam saw and grist mill was erected and is in full working order. This will prove of eminent service to the settlers, who can now procure at hand the lumber required for building purposes and thus afford to make more extensive improvements. Besides, in the winter season they can haul to the mill logs enough to pay for their lumber, thus clearing their farms and at the same button-wood. It was a pleasant sight to see them all so profitably employed and all so happy and energetic looking. There is a compound corn mill attached, but it was not in motion during my visit. Upwards of 100 barrels of pearl ashes were turned out of their factory during the last eight month. The quantity of land at present clear and under fence is 827 acres. There are in addition 216 acres chopped down and ready for fall and spring crops. There is a large quantity of wheat sown this season, some 180 acres being under crop. Three hundred and forty acres are planted with corn, 50 with potatoes, 40 with oats, and 200 with hay, buckwheat and turnips. There is also a considerable quantity of tobacco raised, and it is said to be of a superior quality.

The following is the financial statement of the affairs of the Association as given in the report for the present year:—"The present liabilities of the association amount to £2,944 19s 2d; that is, to Government for land and interest, £2,211 3s 6d; stockholders, for instalments and interest, £733 15s 8d. The assets amount to £3,539 12s 10d; that is, for land sold and interest thereon, £3,352 2s 10J; land unsold, £187 10s; leaving a balance of assets, to meet the current or ordinary expenses of the Association of £5J4 13s 8l."

In order to estimate aright the progress that has thus been made, it is necessary to observe that the settlers have not been permitted to receive any extraneous aid. Most of them entered the lands destitute of means, and having to rely solely on their own labor for support. It is wisely said that the spirit of independence will thus be generated, and instead of those begging customs which have tended to the ruin of other places, habits of industry, and frugality will prevail. What the colored men needs on his arrival in Canada, is not so much money or clothes, as the means of earning both for himself. Of course temporary aid, in many cases, is absolutely necessary, but this is only for periods of very limited duration. Mr. King and the Committee, in conducting the affairs of the association act upon this principle and they do so wisely.

I might say much more of a similar encouraging character regarding this settlement, but enough has been told to prove that under proper management the black man is as capable of success, even in agricultural pursuits as the white one, and that the social and moral habits of the Ethiopian, when properly directed, are not inferior in any respect to those of the European. To the gentlemen who, in the spirit of benevolence and philanthropy, originated this settlement, and to the Rev. Wm. King, who has so wisely and energetically and with such unflagging zeal carried out their plans and intentions, the public are largely indebted. So long as the colored man resides among us, it is of the utmost consequence to society that his intellectual and moral faculties be cultivated, and that he be allowed the freest scope for the acquisition of physical good. By helping him to overcome the degrading and brutalizing effects of his training while a slave, we thereby not merely aid him in exhibiting to the world that he is fitted for freedom, but do much to hasten that day which cannot be much longer deferred, when the bonds shall fall from the limbs of the oppressed, and when all in every land shall be put in the possession of those inalienable' —because heaven-given rights "the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Of our visit to Buxton and of the pleasant drive along the banks of Lake Erie which we enjoyed on our return, we shall long cherish many pleasing remembrances.

The above article, taken from the Toronto Globe, is supposed to have been written by Mr. Thos. Henning. The paper exhibits facts, we are glad to republish; yet there are some things objectionable in it, though just such things as we would expect from the writer. In speaking of Rev. Wm. King, he says: "He is regarded throughout the settlement as the King, whom all are bound to obey." Now, while we hope and pray that the settlers will look up to Bro. King as the Manager of the settlement, and truly appreciate his devotion to their interest, and seek his advice, &c., when needed, yet we also trust that they never will pay that kind of homage and worship to any human being that some people think ought to be paid to Kings. We do not believe Bro. King desires any such homage, &c.; but there is danger of certain colored people having too much fear, &c., of white faces. We have seen the awful consequences of it. We suggest, that the settlers, of the Elgin, regard Bro. King, hereafter, as a father, and not "as the King." But "all are bound to obey." We do not really know, what is meant by such expression, it means so much. If by it is meant, that men and women are to yield their conscience, and give up their private judgment in obedience to "the King," then, to us it is clear, the Elgin Settlement will be anything else than a blessing to the colored people. It never can develop an independent and self-respecting people!

It is also said, "Enough has been told (of the settlers at Elgin) to prove that under proper management, the black man is as capable of success, even in agricultural pursuits, as the white one," &c. That is so much like the slaveholder! It reminds us of a certain Ethnographical Lecture, at a Western College, a labored effort to prove what every man knows to be true! "Under proper management," &c. Indeed, is it true that the colored people cannot succeed, only as they have some white man to control them? It is anything but true. The boot is on "t'other" leg. They have not succeeded, because WHITE MEN would not allow them to; and especially is that true of our people in Canada. Very true, Bro. King is so far, a noble exception. Both the efforts of friends and foes, generally speaking, have been against us. Let any candid man review the work of our friends, on our behalf, in this country, and on the whole, he will say, it has been a curse, instead of a blessing, and that of our foes, is already admitted as such. Brethren, allow us to say to you, frankly, that it is now high time for you to wipe off such an everlasting stigma. Let it no longer be said, that you must be put "under proper management" to succeed! It is in view of such slander, that the white people of Dresden, all wish to move away. It is said, "Oh! the 'Niggers' have bought the best of the property in the Town, and neighbourhood, must come to naught, &c. Let friend Wm. Whipper, Esq., a large property owner there, give the lie to all such stuff. He has the head, and hands to be "Boss," and we know the money is not wanting; and there is our learned friend, W. H. Day, Esquire, prepared for any work or office, as a public servant. We name these first as newcomers, &c.; but then there are of the old settlers, men of great moral worth and talents, possessing good property, men that would be an honor to any community. Let the aged Messrs. Harris and Warren, Deacon Johnson, the shrewd Cary, J. Myers, and gentlemen Hills, Capt. Wilson, Brodley, and a host of others, of equal worth, see to it, that such slander is not deserved at Dresden.

☞ We call particular attention to the letter of our esteemed sister Hopewell. Let it be read with care. It tells her friends, and the world too, many very good and truthful things—things that should be known, and things that we are very glad to publish, and we hope she will give another letter, through the Freeman, of the same style. We are not disposed to "puff" any body, as some fear, but refer to facts, though it may seem to be puffing, &c.; but we must say, that if any colored persons, on the American continent, deserve to be puffed—sister Hopewell does. She is certainly a MODEL PERSON. We hope that there may be a general invitation of her virtues! We see what hope and perseverance will do!! Let every colored man and woman in Canada, up, and do likewise!!!

☞ In our last issue but one, we called attention to the mismanagement in the Post Office Department, somewhere, between Chatham and Dresden. Since then, we have had an interview with both the Post Masters at Chatham and Dresden, and it gives us much pleasure to assure our readers and the public, that THE FAULT is not in them, nor at their offices. We did not suppose the fault theirs, when we called attention to it, for we have long known both of those gentlemen, Post Masters, and deemed them incapable of not doing their duty in such cases.

That last Letter—The Plague in London—More about that Meeting—A Meeting in Toronto for Bro. Garrett, and what he did—Meeting No. 2, next Night, and what the People did—House-Breaking in St. Catharines—Niagara, C. W.—Constables engaged in Kidnapping.

MR. EDITOR:—With fear and trembling, for the many odd things I may appear to say, or may be made to say, or to mean, in this letter, I will now try to make good my promise in No. I, about the London secret, &c. I say with fear, &c., for what odd looking sentences—meaning less words, and original punctuation! Who is to blame? If I am the guilty party, please let the character of my employments, and the very hurried manner in which they must be prosecuted, be my excuse, and your justification for looking a little closer to "those proofs," for the character of the paper.

I referred in No. I, to a "secret" connected with some of our people in London, C. W., and now for the disclosure. There is at this time more ignorance and more disunion among the colored people of London than any place of its size in Canada, I verily believe. One would think on entering that beautiful town, that there would be found only toleration, intelligence and union among the people, as churches abound, and schools are open to all, from the public schools to Mr. Dillon's missionary establishment, consisting of upwards of three hundred white pupils, and thirty or forty colored,—the school supported by funds raised in England to educate the "Negroes" in Canada, &c. But with all the religious and educational appliances, prejudice and ignorance lift up their villainous heads among both colored and whites. Among the whites the British Wesleyans are distinguished for their colorphobia—no encouragement being given to the sable heathen to enter their doors. The English Establishment has, among other improvements, a service for the colored people, in the afternoon, which is probably benevolently designed, as an introduction to the service on the following Sabbath morning; the service is an unwise one, and may lead to a colored English Church. What will those white Christian souls do in Heaven?

The colored Churches are in a predicament—their pastors do all they can, but so long as drunken trustees are allowed to control at the one, and prejudice against whites to hold sway at the other, there will be confusion. I told you about the Fairfield fever! Every man that had no character to care for, was active in hunting up one for this Fairfield, who has so completely drilled his little army, that begging is openly advocated, and threats against the life and security of those who do not agree with them, are quite common. Through it all, however, there stand Jones and Basfield, Hamilton, Moss, Reeves, and others, I could name, true as steel. For the good of white and colored people, a few missionaries should be sent in,—the Anti-Slavery Society established by Mr. Ward should be revived, and a general crusade against ignorance, begging, and the present visiting from house

Mr. Garrett, before spoken of, had meetings in Toronto, just to get the consent of the dear brethren, to buying the slaves; and on the first evening, he descanted most beautifully, on the friendship of General Cass, Bishop McCloskey, Dr. Duffield, and others, who had urged him to come home and ask his brethren to commission him; but when an attempt was made to question him, wrath and bitterness took the place of brotherly love, and the gentlemen were made to wince, under his rebuke; but a "fast" woman, as women are, you know, would be talking, so the Brother deferred the matter to the next night, when the men resolved to publish him as an impostor, if he would persist in going to the States and England on such a mission. Poor old man! What with buying the slaves, and talking about his dead wife Eliza, and telling the ladies he is now in the market, he is to all appearance in a deal of trouble. He told the meeting that as he sat shivering on his bed side, in the morning, with nobody to care for him, or for him to look after, the Lord told him to go to England, but as he did not tell him what to do there, he wrote out his plan to buy the slaves, and General, "friend" Cass and the other Detroit brethren say they have been laboring for just such a plan for the last twenty years. But enough of the "dear" brother who carries what he exhibits as resolutions from different meetings in Canada, in favour of his scheme; but which in reality are minutes of different meetings, with the resolutions condemnatory of his proceedings expurgated.

Tired out with the Garrett humbug, I visited the pretty town of Niagara, on the 25th, where I found the best feeling prevailing in favor of the Freeman, and decided approbation of the movements to secure Dawn. Signatures were obtained, contributions, though small, were willingly given, and some new names added to the paper list. This beautiful town should be sought out by emigrants; the location is beautiful, lots cheap, schools open, and there is a general feeling of the right.

Leaving Niagara, I came to this place on the 27th. On the night of the morning of the 25th, during the violent storm of rain, burglars entered the store of Mr. D. T. Williamson, of this town, and carried off Watches, Lockets, Chains, and Jewelry, to the amount of £150. I understand that as yet no clue to the robbers has been found. Mr. W. is a young and enterprising man, and his loss is greatly to be regretted.

Not long since a colored man, living in the State of New York, named Isaac Parker, became involved in a quarrel and fight with a white neighbor, and was imprisoned. Meantime his opponent sent intelligence to his master, in Hardy County, Virginia, and immediately his young masters, Henry and William Harness came North, with all speed, to secure him, when he would leave prison; but being on the alert, he reached Canada, at Black Rock, near Buffalo, and was there accosted by them, who, in company with the Constable in that vicinity, sought to arrest him; they proceeded on board the cars of the Buffalo and Brantford railway, and again attempted an arrest, without specifying a charge, declaring, however, that they had a warrant for him. Nothing daunted, he refused to go with them; left the cars, followed by them, and proceeded by the towpath towards this place; then a conference was held by all the parties. The slaveholders and their ally, the Canada Constable, drew weapons and threatened. Parker, who is a large, muscular black man, told them not to touch him, and walked on, determined to slay the first one who attempted to interfere with him. So the chivalry knowing their man, thought better of it, and left him alone in his glory. Parker left Virginia several years ago, and came to Canada, but returned to New York, where the above imprisonment for assault, &c., took place. Two weeks ago, he returned to Canada, and after the contest on this soil, with the three cowards, two Yankees and one Canadian, he has determined to stay at home.

The case is one of terror, and should be a warning to the fugitives to be doubly vigilant. The Constables of this section, and petty officials, by their conduct, give strong grounds for suspicion against them. Yankee gold is certainly at work in this quarter. Eleven colored men are now to answer to a charge of mob violence, where there is nothing in the evidence of any truthful man to sustain such a charge. The committing magistrate refused to hear any evidence in their favour—Judge-Kane-like. There is certainly neither British justice nor laws to be had in and about this section, and the colored people look "down-hearted." More about this place in my next.

M. A. SHADD.

St. Catharines, 28th Sept., 1855.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman.

REV. MR. NEWMAN:—Allow me, as an accepted correspondent, under the former regime, to pay my respects to you, and to resume, occasionally, my old "tricks" of bringing the guilty before the bar of justice, disturbing the equilibrium of the apathetic, and encouraging you, J. C. Brown, Esq., and your youthful but energetic assistant, Bro. I. D. Shadd.

I did not get up my plans for the war in the East fairly, before our war in the West broke out, so says I to a friend, it will hardly do to go so far, when war is as close at hand as Dawn, so here I'll stay awhile. Well, you know the result of the first battle, when, behold, on the glorious 18th, our old captain, J. C. B. routed "brother" Scoble and all his aides-de-camp. Do you know that I stake my best fox-skin against Father Henson's suit of broad-cloth, or "friend" Scoble's lost sow and pigs, that students will yet promenade in that soon,—do you know to whom, and what for? Ever since our great and good Wm. Still, of the Jane Johnson case, gave some of us the sign by which to test Anti-Slavery coin, I think Scoble, the dear brother (as that other old "coon" brother Garrett, would say) ought to be put out of the pile, as bad metal, or in the pro-slavery part of the heap. And the few negro "drivers" who volunteer their services, should be permitted to keep silence for ever.

What is the trouble with "Z. H. M.?" one would take him for a Yankee. If he was frog struck one morning, and chose to sing out to "SPECTATOR," he ought to know that "X. Y. Z." has too many knotty little points to settle for that sort of work.

Your friends are proud of your Conservative position, Sir. The Chathamites will yet learn that Reform in Kent, and gouging in Dawn, are of a piece for them. Put "Conservative progress" at your mast-head, with Anti-Slavery and Temperance, instead of your neutral in politics. Sir, the colored men of Canada must study politics—must support politicians, and no better school is open to them than the Conservative school, and what we know of Reformers—what we see of and about Dawn, &c. &c., they would be as safe in the hands of Conservatives as of such Reformers. Should Dawn be kept from them, the Reformers will be the men to hurry the work through Parliament. Do we hear of a justifying or plastering over of Canadian or pro-slavery ruffianism? Your Reformer is ready. So, as a matter of self-preservation, take passage on the old tried Man-of-war, Conservatism!

A friend writes me from Toronto, that they voted to repudiate Mr. Garrett's scheme of buying the slaves, and that if he will continue on old Cass' errand, they will send a word after him to bring him back. I think the old gentleman had better go to work.

Another word about Mr. Still. There is a man-sin among men! The fugitives know him well, as one of the greatest friends and helpers they have, as he is one of the most prominent Vigilance Committee men of his city!

Chatham, 1st Oct., 1855.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

REV. W. P. NEWMAN—Dear Sir:—Will you permit a woman to address a few lines through your very valuable paper, to her many friends in the "United States?" I am not in the habit of writing for the public inspection; hence you and your readers will excuse the imperfection of this composition, and I also may remark, that I have not been blest with an opportunity of getting even a good English education, as my scribbling will indicate very clearly. Having served in the house of bondage, for the first twenty-three years of my life, where the white folks don't get schooling, much less the black ones. Much in the way of erudition will not be expected of me, and besides, what little information I have, has been picked up amid the cares of a family, several of whom are children, being myself the mother of four—in addition to, which, I may say, poverty has ever stared us, as a family, in the face, and husband and I have had as much as we could do, and much more than we ought to have done, to keep us and our children, as we think human creatures ought to live, who are blest with middling health and a good country, such as Canada is! I say so much because I wish your many readers to know, that I am not so vain, at the age of forty years, as to write for their edification. The letter is intended solely for my friends, and especially for such as are now in "Old Kentuck," who made me promise them, before I left that land of darkness and its sights of fetters, that I would write to them, after getting fixed in our new house. I take this method of addressing them for two reasons: and, 1st, I have not time to write to them personally; and 2nd, were I to do so, many of them would not get the letters, for the slaveholders would intercept them, when they saw the Post Mark, CANADA. But the paper containing the letter can, in many ways reach both them, and the despots of that Country, yet so dear to me, though cursed by our Heavenly Father, and the blood of the slave.

My dear relations and friends, in keeping with my promise to many of you, when husband and I made up our minds to leave the country of whips and tears—the country of Fugitive Slave Bill and blood hounds, for this the Canaan of the Colored people, I now take my pen to write to you—I say my pen, because I own something, and have learned to write since I left my native state. Here, I own myself, at least, and the pen is mine, and not "Old Mistress's," as the statute of Kentucky would make it were I there. You are aware of the fact, that when we left the States, we had to borrow money to get us to Canada; but God has blest us, and we were enabled to get here safely, and though very poor, we went right to work, a plenty of which, we found to do, though, we had no trades, and the work agreed with—indeed, it rather improved, our health, and I am happy to inform you that the avails of our labor, have enabled us to pay all our debts, and have secured to us, also a good freehold farm, of something less than one hundred acres, with the necessary outbuildings, and a very good frame dwelling, and the needed furniture within, with a good young orchard of first rate fruit trees, and shrubbery, with grape vines of the best quality, and not a few of very pretty flowers, of which you know, I was always very fond. I will tell you also of our stock, though it is nothing to brag of. "We have a good cow and from her, we have made no little butter, besides having all the milk our family have needed, and sometimes it has consisted of six persons—husband, I, and our children, (for we have lost two, by death—no, I must not say lost, but two have gone to Heaven before us,!) and a man and woman, our hired help. We have also a yoke of oxen —all the hogs we need, and chickens almost without number—indeed we have eat are some very fine Shanghais. I have not space or time to tell you of the turkeys and geese and ducks and guineas. We have raised this season a fine crop of wheat and corn—the hay was first rate, and as for potatoes, I would not count them, for two pounds and ten shillings currency! O, how I wish all you could see my garden when it has on its best dress! But enough of our earthly prosperity, less you think me egotistical? As many of you, dear friends, are not personally acquainted with my husband, allow me to tell you he is one of the best of men. Our two little children are the sweetest little creatures in the world! I often ask myself "what would I do if these two pieces of necessary household furniture, were belonging to any person else?" God knows I would much sooner follow them to the grave, than the auction-stand! I often think of many of you, who are mothers, in the Slave States, in such connection. May God help you and your dear children out of such a miserable condition!

God has been good to us, as you see from what I have written; but I must tell you also of his Spiritual goodness to us. He has disposed us not to forget his Covenant with us, and our children. He has inclined us daily to read his word, sing his praise, and make our requests known to him, about our family altar. He has also given us a house of worship, to which we go on his Holy Day, and worship him "in Spirit and according to his truth." He has induced us to think and do, and then He has blessed the labor of our hands, and the meditations of our hearts, and to him be all the glory! I must tell you also a few of the many good things of our Country, and stop, for I have already extended my letter much further than I intended when I sat down, but I may write again to you, should the Editor of the Provincial Freeman send you this, through his widely circulated paper. I say his, but it is not really his, but ours. The paper is owned, edited and published entirely by the Colored people of Canada. O! I do wish you had such a paper in Kentucky, it would make the "thorns crack under the pot," I tell you. The paper talks right out to the white folks, and lets them know we are men and women, and that we are coming right ahead for our rights? But here I go again from what I intended to say. Let me tell you dear friends, of the South, and you of the North, that CANADA IS THE ONLY FREE COUNTRY ON THE AMERICAN CONTINENT! Well! that is one good thing, but then another is, Canada is one of the most productive countries, not only on the Continent, but in the world, and that is another good thing. These productions are of many kinds. The world never saw such babies, as we have here, and we will put Canada for wheat against that grown in Paradise? And such hogs and horses as we have go'—my stars! and we raised them here. Nobody ever saw such cabbage and corn, poultry, and strawberries, and every kind of such things, since father Adam took his last load to market? The Parsons of our Canadian Churches (of course, I don't mean Colored ones, altogether) I would not be ashamed, (as to piety and learning,) to see in any pulpit in Christendom, and as for our Canadian Scholars, they would not fear to set themselves on the chair of any Professorship, in the old or new world. But to be short, let me say, Canada is a country of prayer and plenty! God is in our midst! Dear friends, in conclusion, permit me to say, I love you, and do wish you were in so good a country as this is. I hope to live to see many of you come to this country; I have already lived to see very many—yes, very many come here, whom I never expected to see come and thank God, all are glad that they did come. Should this letter come to hand, read it to all my friends, you know, whom you can see,

And believe me still,
Your sincere friend and sister,
N. D. HOPEWELL.

CANAAN, C. W., Oct. 1855.

Murder of a British Functionary at Havana.

We learn with profound regret, by letters from Havana, that on the 31st ult., Mr. Geo. Canning Blackhouse, Commissionary Judge of the Mixed Commission, was assassinated at his own residence in the suburbs of the city. The unfortunate gentleman was seated at table with one friend, a Mr. Callaghan, when a gang of white and negro ruffians having burst into the house, secured his servants, and tied Mr. Callaghan; one of them struck down Mr. Blackhouse with the blow of a knife, after a manly but vain struggle on his part. He survived but a few hours. The murderers are said to have been arrested; but we are not yet informed whether their object is supposed to have been plunder, or revenge on the Judge for some implied offence on his part. It was highly to his honor that he was hated by the slave-importers.

Mr. Blackhouse was a protege of the Foreign Office, his father having been Under-Secretary of State in the days of Mr. Canning.—He was nominated to his post at Havana, in December 1852. The lamentable occurrence is but one of several recent outrages on life and property.

☞ In China, the civil war is still raging. The Government has obtained some advantages over the rebels, and shows them no mercy. The Friend of India states that some thousands of prisoners had been brought into Canton, and were being decapitated at the rate of one hundred and fifty a day.—Am. Baptist.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.
IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,
Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend—I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, rear of Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, in the rear of Smith's Grocery, King Street East; any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own maunfacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plaguy pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a systematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

"Then that's the place, for his motto reads"—
Ask of me no trust, when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust, it hath destroyed many;
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

THE CANADA
LIFE ASSURANCE
COMPANY.
INCORPORATED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT
CAPITAL $200,000.
HUGH C. BAKER, Esq., President.
JOHN YOUNG, Esq., Vice-President.

ASSURANCES may be effected in this Company on single or joint lives, or on the contingency of one life surviving another; for the whole term of life, or for a limited period; by a single payment, or a limited number of payments; or annual payments only ceasing at death; to secure a sum at any given age, or at death, should death occur before the attainment of that age. Endowments for children, immediate or deferred annuities, and generally any transaction contingent on the value and duration of life, may be effected in this Company.

Among the advantages offered by this, the only Life Assurance Company ever established in British North America, may be enumerated moderate rates and small expenditures; local management and speedy settlement of claims; liberal conditions, especially in reference to lapsed policies.

Prospectuses, forms of proposal, and full information as to the prosperous condition of the Company, may be had from
SAMUEL S. MACDONELL,
Agent.

CAUTION.

FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangementas ,colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper of the 30th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contrary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1841, a report of "The Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz., the place where, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter, the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from embracing the whole history of mankind in a general chronological work, the author has adopted an ethnographic arrangement by which he presents each nation separately. The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a boundless extent of view, nor bewildered by a perpetual change of the objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession. This method gives to the work the attraction and interest of connected narrative. Another advantage of the plan is, that it not merely admits, but invites descriptive details, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of the historian, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities; and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the soldier, as the true hero of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Presenting views of cities, monuments, coins, medals, portraits, weapons of war, vehicles for travelling, dress, religious rites and the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index—containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume, containing 1200 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal eras. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a history, and to be ranked by some people with many a dozen volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than the one under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

ICE! ICE!! ICE!!!

THE Undersigned begs to return his best thanks to his Customers, for the liberal patronage he has received for the last nine years, and to announce that he has enlarged and added to the number of his ICE HOUSES, having now four, which are filled with pure and wholesome Spring Water Ice, from Yorkville. He is prepared to supply the same to Customers, by contract or otherwise, during the season, commencing from the 1st of June next. The Ice will be conveyed by waggon daily, to places within six miles of Toronto.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influences to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage and think him calculated to do good.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a page or more set apart for their [illegible] and instruction.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,

in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchae of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the public, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; go at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant date, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor vet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the moments with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid,)

PRIDE.

'Tis a curious fact as ever was known
In human nature, but often shown
Alike in castle and cottage,
That pride, like pigs of a certain breed,
Will manage to live and thrive on "feed"
As poor as a pauper's pottage!

Of all the notable things on earth,
The queerest one is pride of birth,
Among our "fierce democracy!"
A bridge across a hundred years,
Without a prop to save it from sneers—
Not even a couple of rotten Peers—
A thing for laughter, sneers, and jeers,
Is American aristocracy!

Depend upon it, my snobbish friend,
Your family thread you can't ascend,
Without good reason to apprehend
You may find it waxed at the further end
By some plebeian vocation!
Or, worse than that, your boasted line
Mayfend in a loop of stronger twine
That plagued some worthy relation!

Because you flourish in worldly affairs,
Don't be haughty, and put on airs,
With insolent pride of station!
Don't be proud, and turn up your nose
At poorer people in plainer clothes;
But learn, for the sake of your mind's repose,
That wealth's a bubble that comes and goes!
And that all proud flesh, wherever it grows,
Is subject to irritation!

THE TWO PICTURES.

The sun set on an ocean, o'er which sailed
A ship slave-freighted; cloud rose o'er cloud
Girdling the horizon as with a belt
Of gold and purple, for the zoneless Night
The sun sinks to his home, and darkness vast Rests like a grotesque giant, on the sea.
No moon or cheering star appears to guide
That lonely prison-ship; the free North wind,
In ominous disquiet, sighs and shrieks,
Telling a plained legend to the skies!
Still, onward sails the galleon—astern
Is golden Africa, torred and blurred—
A tawny mother weeping for her young!

An on the scene is changed, and tempest wild
Encircles the sea with horror. Through the night,
Opaque and palpable, the ship reels on,
A wreck, hopeless and shattered. In her throes
The bonds are loosened which confine the slaves.
And fiercer decks they stalk, vengeful and wild,
Yet all unconscious of impending doom
'Twas their first knowledge of that mighty sea,
Which had delivered them; why should they fear
In this their hour of triumph? Who shall say
That vengeance was unjust which rioted
In bloodiest saturnalia!..... Morn came,
But ocean had another tragedy,
Death claimed the wronger and the wronged,

The sun sets on a Nation, whose domain
Stretches from sea to sea—but in whose States
Oppress on reigns in terror-like a ship,
Freighted with living victims, whom the sun
Scorched into darkness; an unhappy throng
Prisoned in her midst; branded, and aliented,
And full of strength, though impotent through fear!

Are there no storms save those of elements?
Are States ne'er wrecked like vessels! Can we make Prosperity perpetual? Can chains,
Bars, stripes, or death, imprison Mind?—or graft
Foul crime on Nature's garden? Will the night
Ne'er usher tempests to destroy our homes,
And arm the enfranchised hand against our peace?
Oh Providence, remove a Nation's blindness—
Curse not our children for the oppressor's deed!
Hendrick.

From the Philadelphia Daily Enquirer

Happy as a Clam.

A cheerful temper is a natural gift, the desirability of which cannot be questioned, but seldom do we meet with a spirit so thoroughly saturated with good nature that no disappointment, no poverty, deprivation or combination of adverse circumstances can break it down or overcome its geniality. But yesterday morning a man made his appearance before Justice Brennan, who seemed to have a perfect fountain of undiluted contentment somewhere in his composition, which no depressing influences of care or accident had been able to exhaust or adulterate—a typo, a modern edition of Mark Tapley—a human barrel of jolliness without hoops on. He was arrested for being intoxicated. He gave his name as Gettyphat Take, and said he was a printer, and hailed from the Gem of Science office. He is a short man, of a beer cast figure, and a face as rubicund as if he slept in a room with red curtains. His answers to the questions of the authorities showed his contentment under all shades of fortune. The Justice being also in a genial humor, was inclined to banter the disciple of Ben. Franklin, and accordingly addressed him as follows:

Judge—Well, Mr. Take, it seems you have thrown aside the "composing stick" and gone to getting drunk for a living. I'm afraid you're a "bad case" and stand in need of "correcting." I think I shall send you to "quod."

These technicalities, which were uttered in a sort of you-see-I-know-your-trade-as-well-as-you-do-sir, seemed to give Mr. Take that assurance which printers seldom lack, but of which the solemnities of a police court might temporarily have deprived him, and he answered:

Prisoner—Well, at any rate, I'm glad we've no "galleys" in this country, or I suppose you'd put me there, and well "leaded" at that. But bless you, sir, going to jail's nothing; the last time I was there I tamed a rat, and learned him to chew tobacco, besides inventing three new steps for a fancy hornpipe It's a good deal better than setting "solid minion," and getting only a "price-and-a-half" for it. Lord bless you, 'Squire, I'd a great deal rather go to jail ten days than not. I've got sick of work just now, and I'll have a chance to get the bile off my stomach.

Judge—You seem to take it easy; how do you propose to employ your mind this trip?

Prisoner—Well, Corporal, I'm undecided whether I'll learn to whistle the opera of the Bohemian Girl, practice standing on my head, or undertake to acquire the elegant accomplishment of balancing straws on my nose; if I could get a cat I'd teach her to play the fiddle, if I thought the strings wouldn't remind her unpleasantly of intestinal discords after her feline body had been nine times slain.

Judge—Mr. Take, you seem particularly happy under the circumstances; have you got a wife?

Prisoner—Not now, Lieutenant. I had one, but she ran off with a bow-legged cobbler; I was so glad about it that I sent her dresses and a quit claim deed of her person, which I signed in capital letters; she left me one boy—but he was a "foul copy," not a bit like me—I bound him 'prentice to the type-sticking trade, but the first day he quarrelled with the regular "devil," tipped over the "bank," pulled a "form" off the "imposing stone," and "pied" five "columns;" he dropped the "shooting stick" into the 'alligator press," and in the evening he and another hopeful boy were caught rehearsing a broad-sword combat with a couple of "column rules;" the "foreman" "battered" him with the "mallet," and when he got home to me he had a "fancy head," if there ever was one.

Judge—Where is he now?

Prisoner—He ran away with a circus, and the last I saw of him he was in the middle of a saw dust ring trying to tie his legs in a bow-knot round his neck; I've been jolter since then, than ever before.

Judge—You seem to be always jolly.

Prisoner—So I am; I laughed when my father turned me out of doors at eleven years old, laughed when I broke my arm, and made funny faces at the doctor while he was setting it; the happiest day I ever spent was one time when I hadn't but one shirt and a pair of pants to put on, had spent all my money, and hungry forty hours.

I never was really unhappy but once in my life, and that was when I fell down stairs, fractured my collar bone and skinned my leg so badly I couldn't get down on my knees to thank God I hadn't broke my neck.

The Judge relented and let Mr. Take go, and that rotund individual left the room, trying to whistle and sing at the same time, and also dance an independent jig with each leg to a different tune.

Printing and Publishing.

A young lady was explaining the other day the distinction between printing and publishing, and at the conclusion of her remarks, by way of distinction, she said—"You may print a kiss on my cheek, but you must not publish it."

Political Aspect of the Colored People of the United States,

Given in a Paper, read before the first Annual Meeting of the National Board of Commissioners, assembled in Council in the City of Pittsburg, on the 24th day of August, 1855, according to Art. IV. of the Constitution.

Gentlemen of the National Board of Commissioners:

Fellow Countrymen—According to the provisions of the Constitution, we have met in the first Annual Council of the Board, to interchange opinions pertaining to the interests of our race, and we wish that it were in our power, to bring before you such suggestions, as might be adequate to the importance of this great and now all-absorbing subject; a subject fraught with considerations of greater magnitude, whether relating to our domestic or foreign relations—for such we have indeed—than all others combined; although but seldom if ever so considered by those termed the leading Colored men in the United States, simply because they suffer their interests to be swallowed up in common with those of their oppressors, and content themselves with vociferating the claims that they are part and parcel of the body politic—the sovereign people of this country—and it would seem, judging from their continual acts, desire not to know nor acknowledge a difference.

This most unfortunately is one of those political errors and blunders, so long committed by our political leaders in the different States, especially the free, until it has become the leading established policy among them, though fatal everywhere, in its consequences and results.

Our Domestic Relations should first claim our attention, although we regret to say, that amid the world of matter that should be at our commands, we have but little at hand in this department, to present in a tangible form before you.

We shall first call your attention to the Southern or Slave States.

The Constitutions of Texas and Arkansas prohibit slavery forever from being abolished, thus perpetuating slavery within their boundaries. In neither of these States has the free colored man any privileges, but those permitted by the merest sufferance.

Louisiana has provided by law, for the education of her colored children, and also acknowledges the competency of a colored person as witness in a Court of Justice. Yet the same State denies the right of a free colored person entering the state as a sojourner, even as a passenger on the public highway of the great Mississippi. Should they do so, they are seized and imprisoned to await the terrors of the law.

South Carolina also, though her Governor recommends the establishment of the marriage rites among the slave population, and a law prohibiting the separation of families by purchase. Nevertheless, here, as in Louisiana, a free colored person from the free States, whatever may be the business which calls him hither, though he be an American born, or a British subject, cannot enter that State without imprisonment during the stay, should he be employed on a vessel, and the risk of being sold into perpetual slavery if not connected with a vessel.

Georgia, too, a State proverbial for its acts of oppression, and inseparable connection with the slave trade, as associated in the early memory of every colored person in the country, has, during the current year, recommended through her officials the education of the slaves, so that by teaching them to read the Bible, they may be prevented from engendering a spirit of insubordination and insurrection But in all other respects, she is as despotic and hostile to the interests of the free colored people, as any other slave-holding confederates.

Virginia opposes the amelioration of the condition of the slave in any respect, but strongly recommends Colonization to Liberia, and the passage of a law, forcibly to expel from the State, every free colored person. This State also, by custom and example (if not by expressed law) encourages distinctions to be made on account of color or admixture of blood, among the colored people; by impressing them with the idea of superiority of the mixed blood, on account of its proximity to white—provided it is more than what is called "half blood." She, as also does Maryland, prohibits the ingress of free colored persons, or even the return of one who may have been a native resident, if intending to remain out of the State over fifteen days. Nor can a colored person pass out of either of those States, on any kind of conveyance, without first obtaining the assurance of some white, that he or she is not the escaping slave of some Southern "master" or "mistress." For a violation of these provisions, they hazzard the penalty of being "publicly whipped at the post," imprisoned an sold into slavery at discretion.

Delaware has refused to abolish slavery from her deteriorating soil, and prohibits by a barbarous provision, free colored persons from going into the State, under severe and cruel penalties. During the current year, a free woman was sold for life, for being found in the State contrary to law.

Nor does the Western division of the slave propagating States present a more favorable aspect in the political horizon. Here the tempest seems to rage with unabated, if not increased fury.

Kentucky, the State once full of hope and expectation, has repudiated the idea of a contemplated act of Emancipation, adopted a new Constitution, providing strongly against the abolition of slavery, with no reasonable hope of a better state of things for ages to come, and now sustains a most ultra pro-slavery legislature, with scarcely a press in the State, which utters a sentiment in favor of freedom. Nor is Tennessee behind Kentucky in her march of retrogation. And although we cannot refer to any recent acts of newly devised oppression, yet so steeped is she in the elements of despotism, that her march is equal to that of her contiguous Northern sister.

Mississippi still stands a living reality of American infamy. With a constitution also, which prohibits forever the emancipation of the slaves, it has for years been the great barracoon state or slave pen receptacle of all human cattle which embark down the Mississippi valley, where they are gathered in droves preparatory to their final exhibition for the Auctioneer's hammer, or a last resort, the slave bazaar in New Orleans. Missouri vies with the last named State in recent acts of despotism. By cruel enactments she prohibits the ingress of free colored persons from other states and also expels from the State, those of her free colored residents. Forced by measures the most stringent and extreme, the colored inhabitants of that State, especially those resident in St. Louis, have been driven and compelled to fly in every direction.

California by three successive acts of the legislature, has granted to slave-holders the right to take their slaves into the State, for and during the term of three consecutive years; and now seriously contemplates its permanent establishment, which doubtless will be consummated during the next year. In this state the colored people are deprived of the right of testimony in the courts or any case of litigation, wherein their evidence conflicts with that of a white person. By this despotic provision, many of the native Californians, who were a part of the independent sovereign people under Mexico, have been degraded to the humiliating condition of political nonentities. And by a recent decision of the supreme court of that State, given in a case growing out of a suit in which a Mongolian's evidence conflicted with that of a white man's, in which a demurrer was entered; the Chinese stand in the same political position as the black man. He too is degraded to the level of a slave.

Colored children in this State, like that of Louisiana, have to a certain extent, the benefit of funds for the Public Schools.

The non-slaveholding States next claim our attention. In Maine, the people stand on a political level, there being no political distinctions known in her civil code.

Vermont occupies the same proud political position, with the enactment of a personal protection bill by her legislature, which annulls all and every conflicting United States law. In neither of these states it is thought, would be permitted, an execution of the insufferable Fugitive Slave Law. This, however, has yet to be tested, and upon this point, let us not be too sanguine, and expect more than can be warranted.

Massachusetts has twice trailed her lofty Banner in the dust, by yielding obedience to the despotic slave power. But during the last session of her General Court—Legislature—she has somewhat wiped out the stain which so defiled her, by the passage of the "Personal Liberty Bill" an act which teaches the menancing impudence of the Central Government of Washington, that the consuming fire of Seventy-Six has not yet been extinguished by the dampening showers of the engines of the United States Navy.

Rhode Island too stands untrammelled in regard to the rights of sufferage; in this particular all stand on a political equality. But in other departments of her municipal provisions, we are not so well advised.

Connecticut still lingers under the "Blue Law" influence of witchcraft superstitions, many laws still existing against the colored people, which are both disgraceful and cruel. None of the political privileges exercised and enjoyed by the colored people in the foregoing states—as we are advised of—are exercised and enjoyed by the colored people in this state. There prejudice is a growing ulcer, which seems fast to be penetrating the vitals of the body politic. The colored inhabitants, with praisworthy efforts, hold state Conventions for the removal of restrictions; but deaf to all entreaties, she still holds with iron grasp her colored brother by the throat.

New York permits her colored people to exercise a humiliating sufferage by the degrading property qualification; and during the last three or four consecutive years, has contemptuously refused to acknowledge their equality. There too have they been industrious and assiduous, calling State Conventions, getting up Petitions, and even in several instances, sending delegates of their own people to the Capitol to urge their claims in person before their rulers. This year they also hold one, for the same political object. In this state the Public school privileges are great—greater perhaps than in any other in the Union—except Massachusetts—but unlike the last named state, they are based on complexional principles, the "Colored school" system prevailing.

New Jersey is still a Slave State, no act of emancipation having passed the legislature, consequently the colored people who enjoy freedom there, do so simply by passive indifference on the part of the whites. Of course they have not even the poor privilege of sufferage, and what other privileges politically they enjoy, we are not advised.

In Pennsylvania where at one time colored men did exercise the poor privileges of sufferage—balloting into office their peer and superior—by an alteration of the constitution in 1838, they were totally deprived of that privilege. In 1847, as an offset to the Act of 1793, a law passed the legislature, to protect the free colored people, by prohibiting the discretionate seizure of that class of people, and thereby put a stop to kidnapping In 1851 a Bill was introduced in the same body, to prohibit colored persons from coming into the state from any direction whatever. The next year, 1852, a Bill passed appropriating two thousand dollars to aid the state Colonization Society. This was a bold stagger toward falling on their knees before the uplifted lash of their Southern masters During the last legislature, by the assiduity and perseverance of the colored people in different parts of the state, and the liberality of several members of that body, a Bill was introduced asking an amendment of the Constitution, and removing the word white, so as to extend equal unqualified sufferage. In this we failed; and notwithstanding the many county and state Conventions held by the colored people of this commonwealth, with the most urgent and thrilling appeals for justice, the political heart and conscience appear to be hardened and seared against every claim relative to their manhood. In this state we are still permitted to testify as competent witnesses in courts of litigation. The "Colored school" system also pervades, and in the eastern and interior counties, a stupid prejudice exists against the colored people, which is only equaled by the ignorance of those who manifest it. Notwithstanding all this, there are those among us who cling to Pennsylvania as to a Paradise.

In Ohio, the colored people are acknowledged by law, as competent witnesses in the Courts, the disability under which they labored, being removed some three or four years ago, a provision has also been made for the education of their children—the "Colored school system" and a person of more than half white has the right of suffrage. There, as in several other states mentioned, they hold almost annually State Conventions, for the purpose of obtaining their stricken down rights, but with no more hope of success than their Eastern brethren; although the advantages which they now enjoy may be attributed to their own efforts; the whites having extended such privileges as they conceive might be enjoyed by the blacks may grant no more.

In some of the school Districts, as in Cincinnati, they have their own directors—a body of colored men holding a subordinate position to the white Directors—and although having no discretionary or primary power, they have not the privilege of voting for themselves, but must be elected by the white.

Humiliating as this is, a large portion of them, bow to it with pleasurable acceptance.

The barbarous laws of Indiana and Illinois still continue to disgrace their statutes,—especially the former, which prohibits blacks and mulatto's from entering the state, on any pretext, provided they are free.

A slaveholder may with impunity pass into the state with his slaves, and meet everywhere with courtesy, smiles and protection.

But very recently a free colored man in the capital of Indiana was seized upon as a fugitive slave, claimed by a Reverend Slaveholder in Missouri, although he had for more than ten years previous, resided in the city of Indianopolis.

But after clearly establishing his freedom by the testimony of an office-holder under the United States Government in Georgia, the United States Court before which he was tried, compelled him to bear the whole expense of litigation,—a sum amounting to considerable above one thousand dollars.

Nor are the Territories free from the curse of oppression. Oregon has instituted a law, prohibiting a colored person from testifying against a white, and also from settling in the Territory. And those who may now reside there, do so by the merest sufferance

The outrages in Kansas, are familiar to every one. To crown their acts of infamy a law has recently passed the legislature making it a crime, punishable with death, to take into or carry out of that territory, any person held as a slave for the purpose of freeing them. Here upon this point comment would be an idle waste of words and time. It will hereafter be seen whether or not the policy laid down by the Cleveland Convention, of which you are but the agents, was that of political sagacity, and well-advised intellect, guided and directed by intelligent forethought, wisdom, and prudence; or as those who claim to be alone competent to lead and advise us to assert a policy pernicious in its tendency, and destructive in its results to us as a people. We are satisfied, that our position is the only tenable ground, and our policy the only feasable scheme or plan of operation, by which to accomplish our elevation from degredation, and redemption from thraldom as a race

Foreign relations next claim our attention. In this direction there is a hope; if not the genial rays of a sun, to gladden our hearts and brighten our pathway—at least we may descry the twinkling of a distant star, to direct our weary footsteps in our onward march on this long and tiresome journey.

The long anticipated annexation of the Sandwich Islands to the United States, has proved a failure, the scheme being overthrown by the far-sightedness and wise precaution of Prince Kamehameha the III. king of the country. This nobleman has not yet forgotten the insults received by him in various parts of this country, while on a mission as Minister Plenipotentiary, Envoy Extraordinary, from the government of his country to the cabinet at Washington. He is a gentleman of distinguished attainments, a shrewd politician, and will never consent to the suicidal scheme of annexation.

A policy devised by a pernicious pro-slavery cabinet at Washington, which if consummated, would end not only in the annihilation of the name of the Sandwich people, but, in the total extinction of every right and privilege belonging to that people, the whole being usurped and swallowed up by the impudent assumption of "white superiority." The Sandwich Islands, then, for the present, may be regarded as safe; and, it is hoped, the people never will so far forget their own national dignity, nor undervalue their own native sovereignty, as to yield to any terms so disparaging and degrading. This may not be feared, while the influence of the excellent man, now their sovereign head, pervades their councils.

The deep seated scheme for the invasion of Hayti has been signally overthrown, and the wretch who was sent as the accredited agent of the White House conclave at Washington, to the Dominican part of the Island, has been driven away dejected and despised; and his American masters at the Federal City, covered with disgrace. Rather than the consummation of such a design—the subjugation of Hayti by the United States—would we see that splendid Isle sunk beneath the swelling waves of the Carribean Sea forever. But you need entertain no fears in this direction, as the Haytien people are too intelligent and too conversant with the outlandish prejudices of the Americans, for a moment, to entertain any such proposition, however pretending, emanating from the whites of this country. And with such men at their head as the distinguished Sovereign who now rules the Empire, and his accomplished Ministers and wise Imperial Senate—the thought is a very insult. Hayti then is safe, doubly fortified; having the two grand elements of virtue and loyalty.

The marauding crusade against Cuba has also failed, the Spanish Government adopting the policy some time since hinted to them, of fortifying the Island by the establishment of colored soldiery. Under such circumstances as those which for five years past have distracted that Island, black military troops must necessarily be the most secure, because the most reliable defenders of the country and Spanish interests. More naturally prone to obedience, more loyal and submissive, patient and forgiving, and greater lovers of their nativity and homes than the whites; it is but necessary to make them sensible of their true condition and the relation which they bear to the American haters of the Negro race, with an assurance of equality of rights, and there is not force enough in the United States, to wrest Cuba from the Crown of Spain. With the blacks as guardians and defenders, she must and will stand in defiance of all the schemes and machinations now being plotted against Spain in the United States. With the aid of the blacks, Cuba is safe, without it, she must fall a prey to American cupidity.

The despicable puerile attempt by the buccaneer Walker, to overthrow the governments of Lower California and Nicaragua, has resulted in a most signal chastisement of the temerity and impudence of the miscreant, by the countries against which he directed his expeditions. But he was not without encouragement from high quarters, as the government of the United States doubtless in anticipation fully devised—had foreseen this crusade of Walker, by a barbarous attack upon San Juan or Greytown, but a few months previous, in which an unarmed people without military defence, were stormed, sacked, being cut to pieces by a naval force of the United States.

Nor have they yet done, since through the same national agency, another piratical expedition under one Captain Kenney a Pennsylvanian, has within a few weeks past, sailed for Nicaragua. Reports inform us, that he and party have reached their destination, doubtless under the protection of the United States; as Wheeler the recently appointed Minister from the Court at Washington to that government, is a slaveholder from North Carolina, who it is but reasonable to suppose, goes under full instructions concerning this expedition, and all other matters pertaining to American interests, whether legitimately the province of his mission or not But we are informed that the Nicaragua Government, is fully advised of their designs, and fully prepared to meet them. We trust this may be so, since the sole object of the Americans in desiring a foot hold in foreign territories, is the servitude and enslavement of the African and colored races.

Already has there been carried on within the last twelve months, a commerce by the enslavement of the Chinese, and Yucatan Indians. These have been principally carried into Cuba, and purchased by the parties in league with the filibusters. The Chinese are decoyed under the pretext of apprenticeship, and the Yucatecoes openly sold as prisoners of war.

An advisory Correspondence is now being opened and carried on with foreign countries. On the tenth day of July last an official commissioner sailed from the United States to the dominions of His Imperial Majesty, Faustin I., Emperor of Hayti, as the representative of the colored people of the United States, fully instructed on the subject of his mission. He also holds a discretionary commision, to Jamaica, St. Thomas, Nassau, Martinique, Guadaloupe and Central America. He is a black gentleman of distinguished qualifications, literary acquirements and political sagacity. One who doubtless will fill his mission with honor and credit, and we may henceforth hope for a medium of communication to be opened between the colored people of the United States and their brethren of foreign countries, never before dreamed of. By this commission will be established the much needed organization of intermediate communication between all of the colored races on the Western Continent. This is a desideratum in the political prospects of our race, "a consummation devoutedly to be wished for." Without it, we may hope for little; with it we may expect much.

Emigration strictly, is neither domestic nor foreign, but a policy which belongs to both aspects of our political advancement. And while anxiously contemplating the vista in this direction, the threatening storm of oppression is seen giving way, the lowering clouds of despair dispersing, the sunbeam of hope to radiate in every direction, and the clear unobscured sky of promise and joy, spreading fully to our view, dissipating every doubt as to the future prosperity and successful elevation of our race.

The Canadas, from their near proximity, and easiness of access, are made the point of emigration by the colored people of the United States; and notwithstanding the studied opposition made against it by a class of colored gentlemen known and acknowledged as leaders and great men among their people in various parts of the country, those who prefer this country to going elsewhere; the principles of Emigration are fast becoming the leading policy among our people in this country. We are happy to lay before you the intelligence, that the common people generally have entered into this measure with might and main, and whether the "leading and great men," go with us or not—we have fully accomplished our object. We have opened an avenue to the portals of political equality, without which man is but a cipher anywhere.

From every direction, East, West, North and South, our people are flocking into this beautiful country, and substantially settling themselves down by becoming possessors of the soil, as loyal British subjects There is more real estate owned at this time by the colored people of the Canadas, the greater part of which has been obtained within three years, and since the propagation of the principles of emigration by our agencies, than by all the balance of the colored people in North America together. These are indisputable facts, which figures will demonstrate.

The only successful remedy for the evils we endure, is to place ourselves in a position of potency, independently of our oppressors. All intelligent political economists and historians know this, our oppressors know this, and hence their strenuous opposition to our settlement in the Canadas. And it is fallacy to talk of remaining here in the United States for the sake of the slave. Our influence must be tenfold greater when forming a part of the sovereign people of any country whether as an independent people or the constituent part of another nation—hence the desire to seize upon Hayti, and prevent the emancipation of Cuba. Hence also, the burning jealousy existing in the United States against the British and French West Indies. We would that our political leaders and great men could be made to see these things.

It will be as fulsome ere long, to see or hear a colored person in this country opposing emmigration as a measure of elevation to political equality, as to see or hear a white American opposing his own national Independence.

God surely is in the work—and how singularly is his declaration verified, that he will choose the "poor and ignorant of this world, to teach the great and wise"—and with much thankfulness to Him who rules and presides over the destiny of nations, we give all the praise and glory—sensible that he has originated so great a project, with the humble and obscure.

We present you not the result of any hasty conclusion, but the work and sequel of serious study, reflection, and experience of years of intelligent maturity.

Pittsburg, Aug. 24th 1855.

M. R. DELANY.

To Slaveholders.

It has been proposed to us, by several gentlemen who own slaves in Kentucky, that they (the slaveholders) hold a Convention at Frankfort, to adopt some plan for the abolition of Slavery, and that we so announce it; and that the Hon. W. H. Luke, of Pendleton county, (a slaveholder,) be appointed by the friends of the Convention, as one in this part of the State, to draw up a proposition for its gradual abolition; and that the same be published in the Kentucky Weekly News. It is also requested by the friends of Freedom in and about Newport, that M. Luke present his views upon the importance of a Convention, to the readers of the News, and that all favorable to a Convention and the ultimate freedom of our State respond thereto.

Should the fertile soil of Kentucky be declared free by the slaveholders themselves, the pride of "our country" would be turned toward Kentucky, and the surrounding nations would "rejoice with joy and full glory."

The day brightens for the freedom and prosperity of Kentucky, and the inestimable vote by ballot.

The primary element of our State smiles at "the smoking firebands" of Slavery, and bids it adieu. The high vault of Heaven has opened her daylight of reason upon the system, and made visible the pit to Slavery's highest ambition, into which her posterity must inevitably fall.—Newport (Ky.) News.

The Colored Odd-Fellows.

There has recently been held a National Council or convention of colored "Odd Fellows," a society, so we are informed, designed wholly for charitable purposes, and for the improvement of the mental, moral, and industrial condition of the free colored population wherever such an organization exists. It was held on the 7th instant, at Reading, Pennsylvania. Our friend, Isaac N. Cary, who kept a hair-cutting establishment for many years on Sixth street, near the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue was a representative from the society in this city. They could not have had a worthier one, for he is well known for his excellent sense and scrupulously-correct conduct as a man, and consequently enjoys the sincere respect of all who know him personally—and who does not? The Reading Journal of the 8th instant, says of the convention to which we refer above:

"A grand procession and celebration of colored Odd Fellows, including the "Jockabed Lodge," of Reading, and some eight or ten other Lodges from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Lancaster, Norristown, Harrisburg, Columbia and other towns in Pennsylvania; came off in this city, yesterday. It was duly heralded in the public prints, but unlike most demonstrations got up by the 'white folks,' the actual display in this case exceeded all anticipation. From five to eight hundred persons were in line, including some half a dozen excellent bands of music, and the same number of beautiful banners, the whole forming a line of two or three squares in length. Charles Grey officiated as Chief Marshal on the occasion, and Thomas Groves, G. S. Nelson, and Aaron L. Still, as assistants. The line was formed at 10 o'clock, on Fifth street, the right resting on Penn, and proceeded, in excellent order over the following route:—Down Fifth to Canal, countermarched up Fifth to Spruce, down Spruce to Fourth, down Fourth to Canal, down Canal to Third, up Third to Chestnut, up Chestnut to Fourth, up Fourth to Penn, down Penn to Second, up Second to Washington, up Washington to Eighth, up Eighth to Elm, up Elm to Tenth, down Tenth to Washington, down Washington to Ninth, down Ninth to Franklin, down Franklin to the Odd Fellows' Hall, where an elegant oration was delivered by one of the members.

"After the address the procession again formed at the hall, and moved up Fifth street to Penn, and up Penn to the Fair Ground. Here dinner was served up, speeches made, &c. After enjoying themselves thus for a season, the line was again formed and proceeded down Penn to Ninth, down Ninth to Bingaman, down Bingaman to Seventh, down Seventh to Laurel, down Laurel to Sixth, up Sixth to Walnut, down Walnut to Fifth, down Fifth to Penn, down Penn to Fourth, countermarched to Fifth to Franklin, and then dismissed.

"The whole affair reflects the highest credit upon the "colored population" who participated, either as members or lookers on. Everything was admirably arranged, and good order prevailed throughout. We noticed quite a number of intellectual faces in the line, and all were well clad, and provided with handsome regalia of the order. Not a drunken man was visible, not a single "loafer" disgraced the scene, nor have we heard of any "platform" breaking down, or any "muss" being kicked up. Everything was done with such decency and order, that certain "white folks" we could name, who figured in the streets some months ago, might profit by the lesson.

"Among the bands was Johnson's celebrated Brass Band of Philadelphia. They arrived on Thursday, and during Thursday evening entertained quite a crowd, in front of King's Hotel, with their delightful music. We were pleased to see that our citizens treated the visitors with respect. This was due to them, and due to the excellent character of our own colored people, who, from the fact that they always conduct themselves well, have few or no enemies in our midst.—Evening Star, Washington, D.C.

The Colored Candidate for Attorney General.

In our paper of Friday, we published the ticket nominated at Utica, a few days ago, by that small band of Anti-Slavery men, known as the Liberty Party. The ticket is, in many respects, a good one, but as the party all told can't poll 10,000 votes in the States, there is but little chance for it to win. Among the candidates nominated is GEORGE B. VASHION, of Cortland Co., for Attorney General. A friend of ours, who is well acquainted with Mr. VASHION, gives us some information in regard to him which we doubt not will be interesting to many of our readers. He was born in Pittsburg, Pa., is about thirty years of age, of medium stature and light complexion. His father, J. B. Vashon, was an old and influential colored man, (a barber,) of Pittsburgh, was tolerably well educated, and did much in his day for the bettering of his race. He died a year or two ago, deeply regretted by a large circle of his acquaintances.

The present candidate on the Liberty ticket, for Attorney General of this State, was early sent to school, and after acquiring a good English education, his father sent him to Oberlin College, in Ohio, where he graduated with distinguished honors. He then returned to Pittsburg and studied law under Hon. Walter Forward, (one of the ablest lawyers Pennsylvania ever produced, and Secretary of War under Gen. Harrison), but on account of his color was refused admission to the bar of his native State. Nothing daunted, however, on the recommendation of Judge Forward, he came to this State, and was shortly thereafter admitted to practice in his profession. His health not being good, he visited Hayti, and while there interested himself in the political affairs of that country. A few months after his arrival, the Emperor tendered to him the appointment of Secretary of State which he accepted and retained with great satisfaction to the Emperor, until some urgent business recalled him home to this country. Since his return, our friend knows but little about his history, and had lost track of him until the announcement of his nomination in the papers, showed that he still was a resident of this State.

Mr. Vashon is a young man of fine education, of rare talent, and one of the most eloquent and classical speakers in the State. He is modest and unassuming in his manners; and had he the self-confidence of Fred. Douglass, would take a much higher rank as an orator and champion of the rights of the people of his own color, than ever the latter has. The Liberty party Convention could have hardly made a better selection for Attorney-General than they have done, if the Jefferson rule was but the test of fitness for office now-a-days; but as things exist at present, a colored man, no matter how talented, aspires hopelessly when he asks for an office at the hands of American Freemen! But this may not always be. His political horizon is becoming brighter and brighter every day; and the day may not be far distant when he will vote and be voted for in every Northern State of this Union.—Elmira Advertiser.

The Free People's Hate of the People Enslaved.

From the generation of national divisions to this very hour, our beautiful world has been cursed with the bondage of man. A slave is a person subjected to the absolute control of another person. The fruits of such subjugation are various, and awful. But one of its bitterest productions is the entire distinction of the true idea of the brotherhood of men. The legitimate result of such fact is, to gender a spirit of enmity between the people who are free, and the people who have been, and still are enslaved.

There is nothing, in se, (in itself,) to be ashamed of, in being a slave, as already defined, since it is involuntary on the part of the enslaved. If there is any disgrace in the case, it is in the voluntary subjector, and he, who despises the unfortunate subjected! We have long feared that the spirit referred to would find vent, among our colored brethren of this beautiful Province, who were blessed with free parents, or cursed with a slave's birth. We record with deep regret, the fact, that the monster is among us! May it be our privilege to herald, without delay, the death of a being, whose nature is so perfectly terrible! Brethren, it is criminal for us to imitate the example, of that class of white people, who are controlled by a spirit so fearfully wicked. We wish you in this country, to feel your dignity, AS MEN! Do not think, and act, as though there are slaves, in the English Empire. It is enough for the citizens of the "United States of America" to do that. Thank God "bonds-men" do not breathe British air! There is real beauty and force in the exhortation of the beloved Ignatius: "Despise not slaves, neither males nor females," for they are our brothers and sisters!—Let such an ember be kept in the ashes to produce a flame that shall burn up the discord! Such a principle is not bad for the Greek, and it is good for the Hebrew. If the involuntary enslaved are to be despised, merely because of their condition, then, it seems to us equally proper, to despise all, who have been similarly circumstanced, even should they now be dead. Hence, the hate of his Satanic Highness should be allowed free scope towards Old Plato, the philosopher and statesman, since he was once sold in the market of Ægina; and Diogenes, the Cynic, and of Tub notoriety, ought to be treated likewise, as he was purchased by the highest bidder, at the auction in Crete, and Hermeias, the eunuch, and sovereign of Assos and Atarnea, cities of Mysia,—should come in for his full share of such iniquitous feeling, for he, in no sense, was a free-born child. Yea, more, we might urge, in like manner, that the Joseph of scripture—the pious prime minister of the kingdom of Egypt, once slave of the Ishmaelites, should receive his proper portion of malignant emotion from this generation of righteous free men! and that Moses, the God ordained abolitionist, the lawgiver and leader, who persuaded so many slaves to fly from their masters, be not left out, in this division of hatred, as the stigma of a slave is fastened upon him;—indeed, let all Israel have their portion! as the colored people do! since both nations are from the house of their bondage! In fine, we beg the haters of the enslaved to let out to the fullest extent, their derilish disposition against Claudius Lysias, the chief captain, who commanded priests and people, in the days of Paul, as they do towards Doctor Pennington, the black parson, since both purchased their freedom with a great sum of money. Let them do likewise to Onesimus, the christian, and brother beloved of the Apostle Paul, as they do to Frederick Douglass, the distinguished orator, since both fled from slavery to secure their liberty. And even more than that, let all freemen commence immediately to despise THEIR OWN ANCESTORS, for there was a time, when THEY TOO WERE SLAVES!

But "the Fugitive Slave," or those who have secured their liberty, by flight, seem to be the objects of peculiar detestation. Is there anything in their case that makes that proper? We think not. They are members of the human family. It is the universal custom of all people, of every nation, and every age, to flee from their country, if tyrants rule it, and they are unable to conquer them, and enjoy their liberty in their native state. We had as well find fault with the children of Jacob, for leaving Egypt, as the colored Americans, for leaving the hell of the continent and the piety of demons! Why not blame the Phœnicians for pitching their tents out of the country of the Nile? or Titan for founding the kingdom of Argos? or Scerops that of Attica, as us? Do the white people of America despise the Greeks for their flight from the Athenian Republic, after the days of Codrus? Let the appeal of a Clay, and the oration of a Webster, and the benefactions of the United States answer! We ask then, why hate us? But ye hollow-hearted folks of the Province of Canada! Do you hate the Puritan Family of the neighbouring States, as ye do the Family of Sorrow, who is settled among you? Why not? One is a "Fugitive" from Europe, and the other is a "Fugitive" from Democratic America! Why do you not despise the Hon. Lewis Kossuth, as ye do the eloquent Rev. Samuel R. Ward? Both are fugitives from oppression, only one is from the "Old World," and the other from the "New," and there is but this difference between them;—that of their dress;—one wears a white skin, and the other wears a black one! Tell us, ye "wise-sagers," the difference, intrinsically, between a white fugitive and a black one! Why do you hate the one and despise the other? We have among us white fugitives and black fugitives, and fugitives from justice,—some from Europe and some from America. Why do you not hate them all alike, if it is proper to hate simply because they are fugitives? We hope the colored people of this, and all countries, will show to the world, that they have more common sense, at least, than to base their hatred of mankind upon any such sandy foundations, as INVOLUNTARY SUBJUGATION, and FLYING FROM OPPRESSION, to secure their liberty.

☞ We learn that the twelve o'clock train, of Thursday last, en route from the East, in crossing Park Street, came in contact with a one horse waggon. The owner of the waggon, Jeremiah Johnson, an aged man, who was driving at the time, was thrown against the fence, a distance of twenty feet, breaking one of his ribs, and otherwise injuring him; the horse had both his fore legs cut off, and the waggon was completely demolished. Mr. Johnson, it appears, did not hear the whistle, before attempting to cross the track.

☞ We call attention to Dr. Delany's Address, delivered before the National Board of Commissioners, published on our first page of to-day's issue. It is like every production of the Doctor's, good, and will well pay to read it.

United States and Canada—a Parallel.

The United States are governed by a section of their population, situated in the least improving portion of their territory, and both in numbers and intelligence inferior to those over whom they rule. We of course refer to the South as the governing, and the North and West as the governed. By union of action and devotion to to one great object, the minority of the slaveholders manage to control Congress and the executive, and to cause legislation to retrogade towards despotism and barbarism, rather than progress to freedom and civilization. They hold the keys of office and gain Northern support, by unlocking for their worshippers the doors of bureaux. As the United States has a ruling South, so Canada has a governing East, likewise containing a minority of the people, likewise ruling on retrogressive principles, and likewise by mercenary inducements offered to the representatives of the majority. The parallel is perfect, and in the minor details there is also a singular similarity. So long as the South remained on the defensive, or contented herself merely with a demand for the delivery of escaped slaves—she found individuals at the North who could take her money and yet preserve a measure of influence among their neighbors. Her position was insecure, however, she needed something more than to preserve her position; the growth of the North was more rapid than her own, and she would soon be overwhelmed, did she not succeed in subjecting thoroughly to slave influence a portion of territory above Mason and Dixon's line. Hence arose that measure of invasion on Northern rights, the Kansas Nebraska bill, and thence followed the almost unanimous outburst of indignation from the free States, which threatens to destroy for ever the influence of the slave power in the Union. In Canada the Roman Catholic hierarchy is the slave power. It holds its subjects in bondage as slavish as the Southern taskmaster. It has used influence with Western politicians to strengthen its power in its own territory and to extend it in a milder form to Upper Canada. The earlier Sectarian School bills might be likened to the U. S. compromise acts of 1850; the latter gave the slaveholder a foothold on free soil to recapture his bondsmen, the former gave the priest a similar foothold to prevent his spiritual servitor being enlightened by a system of free education. Like the slaveholder, the priest was not content with this; education must not only be kept from the Roman Catholic, but it must be destroyed, by the breaking up of the whole national school system. It was this design which produced the School act of last session—our Kansas Nebraska bill.

Thus far the parallel is exact, nor does it fail when we come to the ultimate consequences. The whole North has risen to exclaim that the South shall not rule over it, that beyond a certain point, slavery shall not come, nay that it shall not exist even in the South longer than the time necessary for the removal of so great an evil. And so in Canada, the whole West declares that the minority in the East shall not rule over it, that to free their institutions from danger, that power which has become perilous to liberty must be reduced in its stronghold. The Northern American has already had an opportunity at the polls of showing how he regards his enslaver; since our Kansas-Nebraska bill there has been no election, but the temper of the people and the tone of the press indicate what must be the result. Parties have been broken up in the Union by the great question, and parties will be broken up here. The opponents of Roman priestcraft, the defenders of education will not come from one side alone. The whilom conservative, and even those who lately truckled to the clerical slaveholders now join with true reformers in the movement, just as whigs and democrats, and even the Union-men of 1850 range themselves among the American Republicans of 1855.—Toronto Globe.

The above remarks of the Globe, respecting the United States, doubtless are true; and infinitely more might be said of the heartless Northern Kidnappers, and their Masters, the fiendish man-stealers of the South. But the parallel is anything but perfect, between them and the Roman Catholics of Canada. It is a point conceded by God and all civilized men, who are not parties to the robbery, or good hearted, though misguided, peace-men, that he "who stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hands, SHALL BE PUT TO DEATH!" But God, nor civilized men have never conceded the point that the Roman Catholics are to be put to death because of their RELIGIOUS FAITH! To say that the Roman Catholics of Canada, or of the more degraded in Ireland, or even Rome itself, are as inhuman, as the American slaveholder is anything but true, and is very uncharitable! We are not a Pope's-man, and God forbid that we ever should be! but we must say to us, at least, it is very unfair to draw a parallel, between the piety of a Roman Catholic, and that of the American-man-thief and pirate! There is not even a distant comparison between the two, as every body must know who has considered their creeds, visited their churches, and marked their conduct towards the colored people! The piety of the slaveholder leads him to treat the colored man, as a beast, while the piety of the Roman Catholic leads him to treat him as a brother. It is true, that the Roman Catholic hierarchy "holds its subjects in bondage as slavish as the Southern taskmaster?" Let the world judge, and the Globe think again, as they behold the abject and trembling slave, of the South, robbed of every right and subjected to the absolute control of a being—that the world dreads more than it does the Devil himself! Is it true, that "the earlier sectarian school bill is likened to the United States compromise acts of 1850?" Has the Globe lost the power of perceiving the difference between A PERSON and a THING? If there be a wrong in Sectarian Education, greater than in a National one, which we by no means admit, still to us, it does not follow, that a sectarian education is equal in its value, either as to its nature or results, to the POWERS TO BE EDUCATED. The Compromise Act of 1850 robs men of themselves—of every element of their humanity, both of their bodies and immortality; while "the earlier Sectarian School Bill," (if it robs at all) only robs certain persons of an appendage to humanity which may be needful to its earthly good. The latter may wrong earth, but the former wrongs both heaven and earth!

Don't let the Globe be too sanguine, in its anticipation, as to the political results in the coming election, with respect to the overthrow of the Roman Catholic influence, in Upper Canada. No doubt the Globe would like to see the breaking up of old parties here, as in the American Union, but doubtless it is mistaken in supposing there is to be soon in this country, a general union of old parties, as in the United States, against the Roman Catholics. So may it be!

Condition of Fugitives in Canada.

The following letter will be read with interest by every friend of the colored man. It is a plain unvarnished statement of the facts as they exist in Canada West, whither most of those who have been successful in their exodus from the land of slavery, have located themselves. Coming, as it does, from one whose character for veracity is above impeachment, and whose actual observation has afforded ample opportunity to form a correct opinion, it is a complete refutation of the base falsehoods so common in the mouths of those who are truckling for the favor of the slaveholder, "that the colored man cannot take care of himself. That the fugitives are in a forlorn condition in Canada, and would be glad to get back to their old masters again," etc. etc.

The colored man asks no exclusive privileges in order that he may keep pace with his Anglo-Saxon neighbour. All that he desires is that the rights and privileges from which he is excluded may be granted to him, in common with the citizens of every other kindred, and tongue, and nation on the globe.

J. B.

ADRIAN, Mich., July 29, 1855.

BR. BOGGS:—I returned home a few days since from Canada West, and having spent about a year as teacher among the Fugitives in that Province, I deem it a duty to correct that oft repeated assertion, that has become as common as household words through the North and South—among friends, as well as enemies—that the numerous, and almost daily accessions to the colored population in Canada, are producing great suffering among them. That they are starving and freezing to death in that colder climate. That those who have left the South, would gladly return to their former protectors, if practicable, etc. etc. To which we subjoin the following facts, (which may refute the above allegation,) obtained by visiting eleven different neighbourhoods of that class, and more than 150 families, in the year's residence among them, seeking out the poorest of their poor, as well as those in comfortable, and some even in affluent circumstances. We could give names of those who are from 12 to 20 years from Southern servitude, whose personal, and real estates are valued at from $20,800 to $30,000.

We found but very few who could be classed among the "suffering." It is true, the sick, and afflicted are to be found among them, as well as elsewhere: and there too we find those of indolent and intemperate habits, with all their attendant train of evils. But to allege these, as characteristic of that class, is an errant falsehood; utterly untrue. They are generally industrious, temperate, and law-abiding. Among the 60,000 who have left their "Old Kentucky Homes," "Old Virginia shores," and other slave states, there are fewer arrests, and committals to prisons for misdemeanor than among the whites, according to their numbers, as reported by the officers of the different communities I visited. This speaks in unmistakable language to all, of their loyalty to the country and government of their adoption. They are fast improving themselves and children in education, and intelligence. My school was located in a new portion of the country, where almost all are settled on their own lands, and are telling by their works, that they are capable of taking care of themselves. The school consisted of between 70 and 80 different members; and not one dull scholar in that number; although the same disparity is found among them that exists in all other schools. In many places, they have organized Temperance Societies; and also Societies called the "True Band," the special object of which, is to remember their "Brother Joseph," by raising funds, to relieve the sick and destitute, on arriving at their shores. However, if health is enjoyed but little is needed for the new comer, as labor is in good demand, wages for men, are from $1 to 1,50 per day, the same per week for women; or for washing, ironing, house-cleaning, &c. 50 cts per day. The climate is mild, and healthy. Soil rich and productive, wheat from 20 to 40 bushels to the acre, and other grains in proportion. The finest Irish potatoes in market are grown in Canada. Sweet potatoes are cultivated there to some extent. A neighbour near my school raised some very fine ones last year, some of which weighed nearly two pounds. We will mention another product of that country, tobacco, which we would gladly have passed over, were it not for showing to the stranger the climate, by its heavy, and luxuriant growth. But we hasten from its sickening association, and pass on to some of the many delicious fruits that abound there, peradventure the nauseousness may be disguised. Apples, peaches, pears, plums, cherries, and grapes, (the three last mentioned fruits, and the first grow spontaneously)—are abundant. As to climate, very little difference is discernable, between that province and Michigan, Northern Indiana and Ohio. Springs are about two or three weeks earlier, in the southern portion of the two last mentioned states, and Kentucky; and two or three weeks later in New York, and other North Eastern states than in the larger portion of Canada West. But says one, if that country is so fine, labor, in such good demand, her citizens so willing to supply it, from whence arise those paradoxical reports? The reply is, from two sources. First, those opposed to their self-colonization plan, cross over their Jordan, spend a few moments in glancing over new objects before them, the eyes of the stranger rest upon a few of the Queen's sable subjects, in their every-day working dress, and perchance there may be now and then one who may not present a very prepossessing appearance, for we do not pretend to say that there are no loungers among them, for if we should assume such a position, we should be compelled to prove their superiority to us in purity of moral character: as the drinking, thieving debauchee is too often found among the whites.

A few months since I fell in company with four Kentucky slaveholders, while crossing on the Ferry from Detroit to Windsor, and returned with them on the second returning ferry-boat, giving a space of only 25 or 30 minutes on the Canadian shore. Said one to another of their number, as the boat pushes out into the River for Detroit, "These niggers over here in Canada don't begin to be as well off as ours at home." "No," was the ready response, "you won'dn't see our niggers looking like that one we saw standing on the bank?" Said another, "Did you see that wench packing water up that steep place from the river?" "Yes, but she had a fine dress on, though, hadn't she?" After silently listening a few moments to these and similar remarks, I rejoined, "But I think you have not given yourselves sufficient time and opportunity to form a correct judgment, of the true condition of the fugitives in Canada. You ought to have remained over the Sabbath, and see them come out to their churches in their Sunday best; and then take a ride of 40 or 50 miles through their settlements, and see them hard at work, on their own well cultivated farms, before you consider yourselves possessed of sufficient data from which to judge the 60,000 self-emancipated slaves in Canada;" upon which, two of their number seemed to be wrought up to almost boiling heat. Said one, with sparkling eye, "If we are to judge from appearances, we have ample evidence of their miserable condition here. I know one thing, my niggers would make a fuss pretty quick, if they had to go looking like these in Canada." Said another rejoinder, "Yes, and so would mine. I tell you, they have some pride about them to keep themselves decent; and you will see them going about their work so cheerful, and happy, they don't look so dull and dauncy as these Canadian niggers do." "I suppose you are an abolitionist," added another, "I presume of the Harriet Beecher Stowe stamp." But I still persisted that their unfair prejudgment, that would probably be reported to thousands, with all the weight and sanction of eye-witnesses, was ungenerous.

The second and last cause of false impressions, so prevalent, is the advantage some designing minds have taken over objects of need: (for they were much more numerous formerly than at present.) Cases of sickness, in destitution, which rendered them proper subjects of philanthropic aid, and these, to advance their own pecuniary interests, engaged, as well as the good and true, in the loud and long call upon the thousands whose hearts, like the good Samaritan, are always beating high, and warm, for suffering humanity, in any form, and in all places—which has militated against the general interests of the cause. Their greatest assistance is in establishing and keeping up schools among them.

L. S. HAVILAND.

Twelfth Annual Report of the American Baptist Free Mission Society.

During this twelfth year of our existence as a Society, some of our beloved and venerated companions in labor, having been tried and found faithful, have been called to their rest. William A. Tweed Dale, of Albany, N. Y., passed away on the 28th August last, in the 79th year of his age. While living, he was a warm friend and liberal contributor to the Free Mission cause; and in dying, he left to the Society, as a proof of the deep interest he felt in its objects, a bequest of one thousand dollars. Ira Haskins, of Belvidere, Ill., died suddenly in February last. He also was an efficient supporter of our cause, and, as we are informed, made provisions in his will, from which it will continue to derive aid hereafter. Isaac Post, of Montrose, Pa., fell asleep in Christ on the 22nd of March last, in his 71st year. He had been identified with the Anti-Slavery and Free Mission causes from the first, and he remained so to the last. By the departure of our brethren, we are admonished that the term of active service with each of us is hastening to a close, and that what we design to do for the glory of God and the relief of suffering humanity, should be quickly done.

The founders of the Free Mission Society had the same objects in view, for which the Divine Missionary, the Lord Jesus Christ, was sent into the world. They sought to preach the gospel to the poor; to bind up the broken-hearted; to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that were bound. A gospel that had no rebuke for a wrong so stupendous as the system of American Slavery, which violently seizes and ruthlessly holds millions of human beings, men, women and children, in bitter and life-long bondage, denying to them all the rights that inhere in manhood, and subjecting them to all the conditions and liabilities of chattlehood,—they believed to be "another gospel," and not the uncorrupted gospel of Christ. Churches and Missionary organizations, holding manstealers in membership, or fellowship, as brethren approved notwithstanding their manstealing, —and aiming to propagate, in this and other lands, only that modified form of Christianity which manstealers approve,—they regarded as having lost sight of one of the essential principles of true Christian evangelization. They believe that the preaching of Christ's gospel by his disciples, should be conformed to the preaching of the same gospel by himself;—that is, that it should include a proclamation of liberty to the captives;—not, indeed, to such captives as were justly held by the law, without first rendering to that law an adequate satisfaction, after which they could no longer be rightfully kept in custody, and must of necessity be liberated; but, pre-eminently, to such as were held in bondage, not justly, as having forfeited their right to freedom, but wrongfully, having been violently subjugated by those who were stronger than they. How can it be otherwise, than that a religion which is identical with absolute right, and diametrically opposed to all wrong, should demand freedom for the victim of the manstealer,—the chattel slave?

It was for the purpose of rendering these and kindred views practically operative, that the American Baptist Free Mission Society was formed. In obedience to the Great Commission, it will do what it can to cause the gospel to be preached to every creature; but it will send forth that gospel only in its purity,—cleared from the false pro-slavery glosses which in this age, and especially in this country, have been superadded to it, and which have caused the churches raised up by our pro-slavery missionary organizations, in slave-holding communities, to be slave holding churches. The gospel propagated by the Free Mission Society, will be, always and every where, an anti-slavery gospel. Its principles, its position, its acts, will all be anti-slavery; and it will thus seek to maintain a consistent, decided, perpetual protest against the most gigantic system of oppression that the sun ever shone upon.

That an organization, based upon such principles and contemplating such objects, should be of slow growth in such a country as this, is no matter of astonishment. The developments of every year show more and more clearly the depth and extent of the corruption which slavery has wrought in the Churches; and admonish us, instead of hoping for a speedy triumph of our principles, to prepare for more strenuous opposition than we have yet encountered.

Arrival of the "Canada."

HALIFAX, Oct. 10th,

The Canada arrived at Halifax at 7 20 p.m., yesterday.

The Herman arrived out on the 24th ult.

The latest dates from the Crimea are to the 29th ult.

Gortschakoff telegraphs on the 23rd:

The Allies landed 20,000 men at Eupatoria, and have 130,000 on the Russian flank.

The Allies attacked the Russian Infantry on the 22nd Sept., and the latter retired.

On the 5th, 30,000 allies detached from Eupatori and occupied the neighboring villages on the left flank of the Russians.

The Russians are fortifying the north side of Sebastopol, and are erecting new batteries.

The French are advancing cavalry and infantry towards Backschire.

Sebastopol is to be razed, and the bastion filled up.

A fearful tempest has visited Sebastopol, with heavy rains.

Further News.

HALIFAX, 10, 3 p.m.

The Canada arrived at this port at 7.20 this morning, and will be due at Boston on Thursday.

The War.

Active operations have been resumed in the Crimea.

Gortschakoff reports on the 17th, that the Allies had attempted nothing up to that date on the North side. They were continuing to concentrate their forces between Balaklava and the Tchernaya, and constantly reconnoitering the left wing of the Russians, from the Bildar Valley.

Letters from the camp mention that the Allies were actively preparing for a campaign.

From three or four hundred deserters, most of them Poles, had arrived at the camp, who said that the demoralization of the Russian army was most complete, and that such was the confusion from the first moment of the attack, that the soldier, exhausted from fatigue, remained 24 hours without provisions.

The loss of the Russians is estimated at 18 000 men.

The correspondent of the Paris Petrie, on date of Sept. 25th, says:

Even since the retreat, the Russians have continued to fire shells at us, and it will be a mistake for us to suppose that out armies in Sebastopol are beyond the range of the enemies batteries on the Northern shore and on the plateau. The balls from fort Constantine reached Dryond Strelitzka, and can very easily throw their projectiles into the town. As to the batteries of the other ports, some of the guns in them are so powerful that they carry shot right ever the town, and do execution in the advanced siege works; but, although, the Russian fires does not cease, it is not very active. The artillery and engineers in Sebastopol are every where at work. Fort St Nicholas, which was before, almost intact, is being fortified, and its cannon already replies to the enemy.

Any attempt of the Russians to return to the base is wholly out of the question.

The Grand Duke Constantine arrived at Nicoloff on the 20th, and it is said the Czar himself would shortly visit that place to superintend the Winter Campaign.

A letter from Berlin, dated 23rd says:—Various circumstances at St. Petersburg seems to indicate that Prince Gortschakoff will soon evacuate the North side of Sebastopol; but great preparations are making by the Russians for a winter campaign.

The Russian treasury has received large sums of money through Berlin.

English war material is constantly passing through Prussia for the Army.

On the 16th September the Turkish Troops at Constantinople intended for Asia, were sent to Eupatoria.

The Anglo-Turkish contingent would go to Trebizond and be placed under Omar Pacha.

It is also announced that considerable bodies of French troops have been sent to Eupatoria.

ASIA.

Vienna dispatches state that Kars was greatly in want of provisions, and that garrison was eating horse flesh.

Advices from the Trebizond, dated 6th Sept., announce that the Russians had abandoned Ezeroam, and were at Mulagalemia.

The Baltic.

DANTZ, Sept 20th.—The Steamer Bull Dog arrived here with mails from the fleet. All the high-pressure block ships had left for England. The weather here continues unsettled.

The Times' Paris correspondent writes on the 22nd:—That the Baltic fleet will winter at Kiel.

Greece.

Letters from Athens state that the fall of Sebastopol had created the greatest consternation among the partizans of Russia, who were always boasting of the impossibility of the allies succeeding.

The Ministers waited on the English and French Embassadors to offer their warmest congratulations.

Russian Ships Destroyed at Sebastopol.

The following is a statement of the Russian fleet at Sebastopol previous to the invasion of the Crimea by the allies. It consisted of the following ships:

Ships of the Line.

Twelve Apostles, 120; Paris, 128; Three Saints, 120; Grand Duke Constantine, 120; Vladimir, 120; Sviotosiaw, 84; Rostislaw, 84; Selaphœl, 84; Three Hierarchies, 84; Tro-Sviotitaha, 84; Varna, 84; Gabriel, 84; Empress Maria, 84; Tschesme, 80.

Frigates.

Cagul, 60; Koulefgi, 61; Kavarna, 60; Medea, 60.

Corvettes and Brigs.

Calypso, 18; Pylade 18; Ptoeemy, 20; Theseus, 20; Eneas, 20.

Smaller Vessels.

The Nearch, Streilla, Orlanda, Drolik, Zabiaka, Lasforga. 11 transports and 84 gunboats.

Steamers.

Twelve Steamers, six large and six small. Among the first are the Valdimir, Bessarabia, and Gromnostetz, which were remarkable for their power and the range of their guns.

In all one hundred and three sail mounting 2200 guns all gone to pot!

☞ The English are casting shells for the Crimea three feet through, and weighing a ton each. Mr. Nasmyth, the great founder, is also casting guns which, with their carriages, will weigh fifty tons each. They require 225 pounds of powder for a charge, and will throw one of these immense balls of a ton weight, four miles.

☞ On the night of Sunday last a man named William Ewers, living at Gravesend, was engaged in a dispute with a woman with whom he cohabited, and being at high words, expressed a wish "that God would strike him dumb," if he was not correct. At the moment his speech failed him, and up to the present time he has not been able to speak a word. Beyond the loss of speech he is in no way affected, either by paralysis or epilepsy, so that there appears no physical cause for the impediment.—Woolwich Independant.

Emigration to Canada increasing, while to the United States it is decreasing.

The annual returns of the emigration into Canada during the past year have just been published, and show a large increase, the total from the United Kingdom and the continent of Europe having been 53,183 against 36,699 in 1853. The average length of the passage from the United Kingdom was forty-seven days, and from continental ports fifty-eight days. By the steamers from Liverpool it was sixteen days. Since 1851, the emigration from Ireland to Canada has shown a great excess of females over males, the result, probably, of men who have succeeded well in the colony having sent remittances for their female relatives to join them. Last year the excess was 2,209 women, being double that of the previous year. Three vessels were lost during the season, but without any sacrifice of life.

Scarcely any complaints were made of infringements of the Passenger Act, but some defects of that act were rendered apparent, which call for remedy. The chief of these is the system of issuing the provisions in an uncooked state, the struggle for the use of the stoves leading to violence and oppression on the part of the strong over the weak and timid. Of the total 53,183 immigrants, 35,132 were of British origin, the remaining 18,051 being foreigners. Of these 14,000 British and 8,000 foreigners passed through to the United States, and the number that remained as permanent settlers in Canada was therefore 31,183. In addition there was an accession of 7,000 or 8,000 to the population of the Provinces by persons arriving from the United States.

The disposition to settle permanently in Canada is stated to have been stronger than at any former period. This is attributed partly to the depressed condition of business in the United States and partly to the effects of the Know-Nothing movements against foreigners. A body of fifty or sixty Norwegians, who have settled near Sherbrooke, are regarded as very valuable colonists, and a strong hope is entertained that they may be the means of attracting further arrivals.—London Times, August 24.

A Fact not Generally Known.

The New York Central Railroad Company have a large store, at Rochester, N. Y., devoted to the storage of lost baggage of all sorts accumulating on the road.—After a brief period at the other depots and no claim made, the trunk, umbrella, shawl, cane, fan, or whatever the article may be, is sent to the General Store for lost articles, at Rochester, and remains there until called for. We are told an accumulation of tons in weight of such goods is already on hand.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8, 1855.

A letter in the Tribune, from New Orleans, states that active efforts have been made in that region to enlist troops for the Walker and Kinney expedition. Several wealthy planters have subscribed large sums, and others have agreed to emigrate there with their slaves. The funds guaranteed already to Kinney, it is said, amount to over $5,000,000.

NOTHING LIKE LEATHER.

IF YOU WOULD BE RICH,

Read this, and save your Penny.

GOOD morrow, friend--I'm a stranger in your borough, can you inform me where I can get a pair of good boots made?"

"Yes, sir, I can; just go to T. W. WILSON'S, King St. East, Chatham, next to Smith's Grocery; that's the place; he'll accommodate you most satisfactorily."

"Well, how is your judgment in regard to the quality of boots and shoes?"

"Most excellent—I'm an old boot and shoe maker; many are the days that I've drawn the cords."

"Where did you say I could find him?"

"Why, the next door to Mr. Andrew Smith's Grocery, corner of King and William Streets, East,—any person can tell you."

"Will you conduct me there?"

"I will with pleasure; for I know him to be, from experience, one of the best manufacturers of BOOTS AND SHOES in town. His stock is of his own manufacture, and he has always on hand a superior quality for gentlemen's wear. He's also very particular in getting up his work; so I'm confident he can't fail to give reasonable satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage."

"There are some boot makers whose work is beautiful to the eye, but plagury pinching to the feet; and I have lumps upon each instep, which in foul weather give me excruciating pain."

"Ah, yes, too much have I suffered by fetters from the boot moulders hands; but he's not one of them; he endeavours to make a sys ematic fit, measuring from joint to heel, and from lump to toe—closely observing the most minute protuberance, if there be any upon the feet; and he seldom fails to make his boots set as easy thereon as a glove upon a lady's tender finger. Besides, he always keeps a superior stock on hand; perhaps you might obtain a pair upon the instant, that would fit your feet and please the eye."

"Then I must try him."

"Try him, of course, and you'll save at each end of your bargain. First—you'll buy cheaper—secondly, your boots will wear you longer."

"Come, let's go."

"I'm ready—Are you a cash man?"

"I am; for he who pays cash clips the discount of credit, and secures it in his own pocket."

Then that's the place, for his motto reads—
Ask of me no trust when you come to buy;
Ask of me no trust, for you I must deny;
Ask of me no trust it hath destroyed many,
Ask of me no trust, I cannot grant you any;
Ask of me no trust, but with your cash rally;
Ask of me no trust, nor with my pocket dally.

THE CANADA

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT

CAPITAL $200,000.

HUGH C. BAKER, Esq., President.
JOHN YOUNG, Esq., Vice-President.

ASSURANCES may be effected in this Company on single or joint lives, or on the contingency of one life surviving another; for the whole term of life, or for a limited period; by a single payment, or a limited number of payments; or annual payments only ceasing at death; to secure a sum at any given age, or at death, should death occur before the attainment of that age. Endowments for children, immediate or deferred annuities, and generally any transaction contingent on the value and duration of life, may be effected in this Company.

Among the advantages offered by this, the only Life Assurance Company ever established in British North America, may be enumerated moderate rates and small expenditures; local management and speedy settlement of claims; liberal conditions, especially in reference to lapsed policies.

Prospectuses, forms of proposal, and full information as to the prosperous condition of the Company, may be had from

CAUTION.

FROM information received from reliable sources we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, encouraging to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangemenias colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity from which his release was more improbable than his continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the fleshpots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profit be for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles exposing the American Tract Society, has this [illegible] thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the moral sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the slave trade slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1841, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books of the American Tract Society," was published, and in that report, the mutilations [illegible] in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE

EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

OR

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

It is believed that a Universal History, suitable in form, extent, and arrangement, to the wants of the mass of American readers, has never been presented to the public. For this reason, and in compliance with numerous suggestions from those entitled to respect, the author has undertaken the formidable task of supplying one of a popular character and for general use.

A reader of history should always have in mind two things—viz. the place, and the time when, an event happened. In the present work therefore, the geography of each country whose history is carefully given; and to aid the reader, seventy stylographic maps have been added. Careful attention, also, has been paid to Chronology, so that, at every page and every chapter the reader may find the dates of the events which are described.

In order to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises from a mere enumeration of facts in mankind in a general chronological work, the author has adopted an other arrangement by which he presents each nation separately The advantages of this plan for a popular treatise, are obvious. The mind of the reader is not overtasked by a bound less [illegible] bewildered by a perplexing multiplicity of objects. On the contrary, everything is clear and distinct. Events, instead of being forced out of their true place and connection, are presented in easy and natural succession, thus imparting to the work the attraction of a [illegible] narrative. Another advantage of this plan is that it not merely admits, but invites [illegible] tails, illustrative anecdotes, personal adventures and sketches of character, all of which serve not only to give life and effect to the pages of history, but to impart the colors of truth and reality to the pictures he may present.

While the work thus presents a separate and distinct history, and also exhibits the present state of every nation, ancient and modern, including the recent revolutions in Europe, still, for the purpose of showing how nations have acted upon or influenced the destinies of one another, General Views are given, at suitable periods, presenting the great movement of mankind, as one family, in its onward march from the past to the present time.

It is proper to state, that while the author promises only a compilation, yet he has endeavored to choose from the highest and best authorities: and while the work is offered as a popular treatise, it still seeks to present the practical results of philosophic investigation; and finally, that while justice is rendered to the classic ages, the whole work is written in the spirit of modren civilization—which places justice above power, prefers peace to war, and regards the Christian, rather than the warrior, as the model of our race.

The work is illustrated with 700 engravings, designed rather for instruction than mere embellishment. Portraits and views of cities, monuments, costumes, modes of warfare, vehicles of travel, [illegible] the manners and customs of ancient and modern times.

With a view to render it more valuable, especially in the family library, an ample chronological table is given, with a full index, containing upwards of four thousand historical and geographical names;—thus rendering it a CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, and UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER, available, for daily and familiar use, as a book of reference.

The work is in one imperial octavo volume, containing 1300 royal 8vo. pages, in double columns, and embraces as much printed matter as six or eight octavo volumes of ordinary extent.

AND IS BROUGHT DOWN TO THE YEAR 1854.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have [illegible] spoken, and can, therefore, [illegible] only add that the portion [illegible] geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds a history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History is to be considered as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He tells his story readily and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social habits, dress, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the family circle, being neither deep nor dry, and [illegible] but a cost plate, and well illustrated, as well as with pen and labor.

ICE! ICE!! ICE!!!

THE Undersigned begs to return his best thanks to his Customers, for the liberal patronage he has received for the last nine years, and to announce that he has enlarged and added to the number of his ICE HOUSES, having now four, which are filled with pure and wholesome Spring Water Ice, from Yorkville. He is prepared to supply the same to Customers, by contract or otherwise, during the season, commencing from the 1st of June next. The Ice will be conveyed by waggon daily, to places within six miles of Toronto.

All orders sent to THOS. F. CARY. Hairdresser, Front Street, two doors from Church Street, will be punctually attended to.

Poetry.

From the N. Y. Tribune.

Too Poor to Pay.

We were so poor when baby died,
And mother stitched his shroud,
The others in their hunger cried
With sorrow wild and loud;
We were so poor, we could not pay
The man to carry him away.

I see it still before my eyes—
It lies upon the bed,
And mother whispers through her sighs,
"The little boy is dead,"
A little box of common pine
His coffin was—and may be mine!

They laid our little brother out,
And wrapped his form in white,
And as they turned his head about,
We saw the solemn sight,
And wept as little children weep,
And kissed the dead one in his sleep.

We looked our last upon his face,
And said our last "good bye,"
While mother laid him in the place
Where those are laid who die:
The sexton shoved the box away,
Because we were too poor to pay!

We were too poor to hire a hearse,
And could not get a pall;
And when we drove him to the grave,
A waggon held us all:
'Twas I who drove the horse, and I
Who told my mother not to cry.

We rode along the crowded town,
And felt so lone and drear!
And oft our tears came trickling down,
Because no friends were near:
The folks were strangers, selfish men,
Who hadn't lost a baby then.

We reached the grave, and laid him there,
With all the dead around:
There was no priest to say a prayer
And bless the holy ground:
So home we went with grief and pain—
But home was never home again!

And there he sleeps, without a stone
To mark the sacred spot;
But though to all the world unknown,
By us 'tis ne'er forgot:
We mean to raise a stone some day,
But now we are to poor to pay.

Miscellaneous.

A Woman and an Angel.

'Is my cashmere vest ironed? I want it and my white duck pantaloons this evening.'

This interrogatory was addressed by a very fashionable-dressed young man to his sister, who was not so fashionably dressed; in fact, had on only a neat calico. She was putting the band to a beautifully made shirt, which was for the aforesaid fashionably-dressed individual.

'No, Harry, it is not. You know this is washing-day, and it is hardly dry.'

'There is time enough to dry it by the stove, and I must have it, for I am going to wait on Miss M—— to the concert to-night. So don't forget,' and he took his hat and walked out.

His sister, for it was to her he was speaking, flushed, and it must be told, looked angry; but soon laying aside her work, went out, got the things off the line, sprinkled and folded them; then making a fire in the stove, she put her irons in, and sat down to take a few stitches while they were heating. And while she is doing so, I will tell you something about her,'

The young man, her brother, belonged to rather a numerous class. He was a clerk, getting a fair salary. He lived at home, paying no regular board, helping with the expenses of the family. He dressed, as most clerks do, quite fashionably; wore the neatest made shirts, and nicest smoothed clothes, all of which was done for him by his sister. She took great pride in the appearance of her brother, and bestowed more physical labor in keeping him looking so nice than he did in return for his good salary. But lately he had become quite exacting, and ordered her in rather a premptory manner, and at inconvenient times, to do such things as he had just asked her. She had a great deal to do in assisting her mother with the family, besides attending to his wants; and his demands at times appeared arbitrary. Yet she never refused him. He is not the only one whom a sister's toil has enabled to make a better appearance in the world at less expense than otherwise could have been done. These extra calls on her labor, and want of appreciation of them, had only been made since his acquaintance with a certain Miss M——. He was continually praising her as one of the most angelic beings in existence, perfectly beautiful, with the sweetest little hand, not broader than three of his fingers, and so white and soft: and he would glance involuntarily at his sister's hand, which was not so very small and white; and how could it be when she had to stand for hours at the ironing-table, besides sweeping, dusting and making beds, in fact, leading an active and useful life? Yet the comparison would hurt her feelings, and she often wished he would not talk to her of Miss M——, for she knew if she had done her duty, her hands would not be so very soft and white, for she had seen her mother scrubbing the steps and washing in the yard, although Harry had told her Miss M—— said her "Ma had delicate health."

The more the young man thought of Miss M——, the less he seemed to care for Lizzie, and the more he asked her to do for him. And no matter how much she toiled, he never had time to do the slighest favor for her, so occupied was he with his courtship to his angel.

Now, to let you into the secret, Miss M—— had something to do with this. She had learned the character of this devoted sister, and fancied her lover would expect something like it from his wife. So she had weaned him from her purposely; and from the very cause that should have made him think more of her, he actually thought less. He had unconsciously imbibed the very common idea, that soft hands and fine airs are indispensible in making a lady. His sister not having either, he felt a little ashamed for her; notwithstanding his knowledge of her sound sense and true heart. He was too much in love with a pretty face to reflect if she performed the duties called for by their circumstances, it would be impossible for his lady love to be so. They were very well performed, however, by her mother, who was somewhat ailing, it is true.

When at last the young man married his angel, though Lizzie shed tears at their separation, her labors certainly were considerably lightened, and her hands had a better chance of becoming soft. She loved her brother, and like a true woman, hoped he would be very happy, and that his wife would keep him nice. This had been her especial pride; and every wife ought to consider it a duty. But when in a very little time she saw him wearing soiled vests and crumpled bosoms she very easily knew to whom the blame belonged. He began to look frowning, and speak cross and complaining, and at length was taken very sick. When Lizzie went to see him, he begged her so hard to stay and give him real 'old time nursing.' She now learned that angels got very tired waiting on 'fretful sick people who have been 'spoiled' by too much attention at home. They were enough to 'kill any with fatigue.' And how many cross looks the sister got while attending quietly but constantly to her brother's wants. The old brother-look came back to his face, and he got so much better in one day, that Lizzie offered to stay all night with him. And the angel determined to sit up with her, only lying down to take a short nap—which lasted all night.

With this experience, Lizzie thought that woman make considerably better wives than angels. Their proper place seems to be where there is no care or trouble. Young men, be careful of catching an angel. They are quite numerous.

A Pastoral Reminiscence.

I was called to stand by the dying bed of a young Minister of the gospel, who, under the dread power of consumption was gradually sinking to the grave. The hectic flush was upon his cheek, his chest heaved laboriously; and his faint utterance was anon arrested by that painful and hollow cough which medical science can scarcely assuage. Yet his soul was full of light and joy, while the physical system was tortured—a practical proof that the spirit in its strange existence is independent of the body. He had a few hours before I visited him been apparently dead, but as his wife and mother stood gazing upon his pale face through their tears and fancying that the happy soul had fled into the presence of the Lord, he sighed, and again returned to conscious existence, but he looked sad, this was something new, and his anxious mother asked the reason of his obvious gloom. He replied "when I sunk into that low state, my eyes were opened, and I saw in this room lovelier beings than I ever conceived of, waiting to accompany me to another abode, their very looks thrilled my soul with joy, and I felt enraptured at the idea of going with them, but they began, to my inexpressible grief, to leave the room without me, and I awoke and found them all gone. This is the cause of my gloom." He had recovered his wonted peace of mind when I visited him, and spoke to me of the vision, as he termed it, with much earnest delight. After conversation and prayer I left him, rejoicing more that he rested with unshaken firmness on the righteousness of Christ, than that he had seen a vision. My attention was called, however, forcibly to the subject of his visitants afterwards. Two days after I left him he died, and in what had been his own pulpit, I improved his death. I learned from the family before I commenced the funeral exercises, that he sunk gradually into the arms of death, and just before he expired he looked up with a smile lightening his whole countenance and said in a firm distinct voice: "I shall go with them this time mother I" when he breathed his last. I narrated these circumstances to his people, and it produced emotions which will never be forgotten. P.

Humor and Wit.

A New View of Spirits.

The Brandon (Mississippi) Register reports the following curious sermon, preached at the town of Waterproofs, not far from Brandon:—

"I may say to you, my brecthring, that I am not an edecated man, an' I am not one o' them as bleeves that edecation is necessary fur a gospel minister, fur I bleeve the Lord edecates his preachers jest as he wants 'em to be edecated, an', although I say it, that ought not, to say it, yet in the State of Indianny, whar I live, thar's no man as gits a bigger congregation nor what I gits.

"Thar may be some here to-day, my breethren, as don't know what persuasion I am uv. Well, I may say to you, my breethering, that I am a Hardshell Baptist. Thar's some folks as don't like the Hardshell Baptists, but I'd ruther hev a hard shell as no shell at all. You see me here, to-day, my breethering, drest up in fine close, you mout think I was proud, but I am not proud, my brcethering, and although I've been a preacher uv the Gospel fur twenty years, an' although I'm captain of that flat boat that lies at yure landing, I'm not proud, my breethering.

"I'm not a gwine ter tell edzactly whar my tex may be found; suffice it tu say, it's in the lids of the Bible, an you'll find it, somewhar 'tween the first chapter of the Book of Generations and the last chapter of the Book of Revolutions, and ef you'll go and sarch the Scriptures, as I have sarched the Scriptures, you'll not only find my tex thar, but a great many uther texes as will do you good to read, an' my tex, when you shall find it, you shall find it to read thus:—

"'And he played on a harp uv a thousand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck.'

"My tex, betherering, leads me to speak uv sperits. Now thar's a great many kinds of sperits in the world—in the fust place, thar's the sperits as some folks call ghosts, and then thar's the sperits uv turpen time, and then thar's the sperits as some folks call liquor, an' I've got as good an artikel of them kind uv sperits on my flat boat as ever was fotched down the Mississippi river; but thar's a great many other kind of sperits, for the tex sez: "'He played on a harp uv a thou-sand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck.'

"But I'll tell you the kind uv sperits as is ment in the tex, it's fire. That is the kind uv sperits as is ment in the tex, my breethering. Now thar's a great many kinds uv fire in the world. In the first place, thar's the common sort uv fire you light a segar or pipe with, and then thar's ca -fire, fire before yure reddy, and full back, and many other kinds uv fire; for the tex sez: 'He played on a harp uv a thousand strings—sperits uv just men made perfeck.'

"But I'll tell you the kind uv fire as is ment in the tex, my breethering—its HELL FIRE! an' that's the kind uv fire as a great many uv you'll come to, ef you don't do better nor what you have bin doin'—for 'He played on a harp uv a thou-sand strings—sperits uv just men made perfeck.'

"Now, the different sorts uv fire in this world may be likened unto the different persuasions of Christians in the world. In the fust place we have the Piscapalians; and they are a high sarum' and a high-falutin set, and they may be likened unto a turkey-buzzard, that flies up into the air, and he goes up and up, till he looks no bigger than your finger nail, and the fust thing you know, he cums down and down, and down, and is a fillin' himself on the karkiss uv a dead hoss, by the side uv the road—and 'He played on a harp uv a thou-sand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck.'

"And then thar's the Methedis, and they may be likened unto the squirrel, runnin' up into a tree, for the Methedis bleves in gwine on from one degree of grace to another, and finally on to perfeckshun, and the squirrel goes up and up, and up and up, and he jumps from lim' to lim', and branch to branch, and the fust thing you know he falls, and down he cums kerflummux, and that's like the Methedis, for they is allers fallin' from grace, ah! And—'He played on a harp of a thou-sand strings—sperits uv just men made perfeck.'

"And then, my breethering, thar's the Baptist, ah! and they hev bin likened unto a possum on a 'simon tree, and the thunders may roll, and the earth may quake, but that possum clings there still, ah! And you may shake one toot loose, and the other's ther, and you may shake all feet loose, and he laps his tail around the limb, and he clings furever, for—'He played on a harp uv a thou-sand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck.'"

A New Cure.

On board a ship one day, we were stowing away the hammocks, when one of the boys came with his hammock on his shoulder, and, as he passed, the first lieutenant perceived that he had a quid of tobacco in his mouth.

"What have you got there?" asked the lieutenant, "a pum boil? Your cheek is much swollen."

"No, sir," replied the boy, "there's nothing at all the matter."

"O! there must be; perhaps it is a bad tooth. Open your mouth, and let me see.

Very reluctantly the boy opened his mouth, which contained a large roll of tobacco leaf. "I see, I see, said the lieutenant; poor fellow! how you must suffer! your teeth need cleansing. I wish we had a dentist on board, but as we have not, I will operate the best I can. Send the armorer up here with his tongs." When the armorer made his appearance with his big tongs, the boy was compelled to open his mouth, while the tobacco was extricated with this rough instrument.

"There now my boy!" said the lieutenant, "I am sure that you must feel better already; you never could have any appetite with such stuff in your mouth. Now, captain of the afterguard bring a peice of old canvas and some sand, and clean his teeth nicely."

The captain of the afterguard came forward, and grinning from ear to ear, put the boy's head between his knees, and scrubbed his teeth well with sand and canvas for two or three minutes.

"There, that will do," said the lieutenant, "Now, my little fellow, take some water and rinse out your mouth and you will enjoy your breakfast. It was impossible for you to have eaten anything with your mouth in such a filthy condition. When you are troubled in the same way again, come to me, and I will be your dentist." The lad was completely cured, by the ridicule of this occurrence, of the habit of tobacco chewing.—Captain Marryat.

Large Fees.

Sir Astly Cooper, the celebrated surgeon, is said to have received the largest fee ever given for an operation. It was upon an old gentleman 70 years of age, a resident of the West Indies, who, being afflicted, went to England to undergo an operation. It was performed with Sir Astley Cooper's accustomed ability; and upon visiting him one day when he was able to quit his bed, he observed to his surgeon that he had feed his physician, but not his surgeon. He desired to know the amount of his debt, and Sir Astley replied, "Two hundred guineas!" "Pooh! pooh!" exclaimed the old gentleman, "I shan't give you two hundred guineas; there, that is what I shall give you!" taking off his nightcap and tossing it to Sir Astley.—"Thank you, sir," said the surgeon, "any thing from you is acceptable;" and he put the cap in his pocket. Upon examination it was found to contain a check for a thousand guineas.

RECIPES, &c.

Remedy for the Founder in Horses.

I send you a receipt for the founder in horses, which I have never seen in print. I have used and recommended it for fifteen years, and so far as my experience goes, it is a sure and speedy remedy:—Take a tablespoonful of alum, pull out the horse's tongue as far as possible, and throw the alum down his throat; let go of his tongue, and hold up his head until he swallows it. In six hours time, no matter how bad the founder, he will be ready for moderate service. I have seen this remedy tested so often, with perfect success, that I would not make five dollars difference in a horse foundered (if done recently) and one that was not.—Cor., Country Gent.

☞ Never put your horse to work with a full stomach.

Poll Evil in Horses.

For the benefit of those who have or may hereafter have horses that have the poll evil, or fistula, we would say,—don't sell the animal for a trille, or give him away; but cure him sound and well. We care not how long it has been running, it can be cured for one dime; yes, one dime's worth of muriatic acid will cure the worst case of old poll evil. First wash the sore well with strong soap suds; then drop eight or ten drops of the acid in it twice a day till it has the appearance of a fresh wound; after which it should be washed clean with soap suds made from Castile soap, and left to heal, which it will quickly do if the acid has been used long enough. But if it does not get well, apply the acid again till it does cure; for it is a sure remedy, and will not fail if it is applied till the diseased flesh is all burned out.—Prairie Farmer.

Erysipelas.

The New Haven Palladium says: "We are able to record another case of the complete cure of erysipelas, by the simple application of raw cranberries pounded fine. The patient was a young lady, one side of whose face had become so much swollen and inflamed that the eye had become closed and the pain excessive: A poultice of cranberries was applied, and after several changes the pain ceased, the inflammation subsided, and in the course of a couple of days every vestige of the disease had disappeared. The case occurred in the family of one of the editors of the Palladium, and we can therefore vouch for the truth."

Laying out Surfaces.

To lay out an Acre in a Circle.

First fix a centre, and with a rope as a radius, seven rod, three links, three-eighths long, one end attached to the centre and kept uniformly stretched, the sweep of it at the other end will lay out the acre. For one quarter of an acre, a rope three rods and fourteen links will be the right length. For one-eighth of an acre a rope of two rods and thirteen links will be enough.

Triangle.

If you wish a triangle to contain just an acre, make each side nineteen rods, five and half links long. A triangle whose sides are six rods and twenty links each, will contain one-eighth of an acre.

To lay out an Eslipse or Oval.

Set three stakes in a triangular position—around these stretch a rope. Take away the stake at the apex of the triangle, which will be where the side of the oval is to come; move the stake along against the rope, keeping it tightened, and it will trace out the oval. A square to contain an acre, or just one hundred and sixty rods, should have each of its sides just twelve rods, ten feet and seven-tenths long.

To draw an Oval of a given size.

The long and the short diameters being given—say twenty feet the shorter, and one hundred for the longer—divide the short diameter into any number of equal parts, say ten, and from each point draw a line parallel to the long diameter; then divide the long diameter into the same number of equal parts (ten) and from each point to point where each corresponding link cuts the other, on the outside, and this connecting mark will describe the oval or eslipse required.—Maine Farmer.

The Destruction of Trees by Ants.

These are not very destructive, yet they sometimes do considerable injury to beds of seedings, by making hillocks among them, and they also infest ripe fruits.

Boiling water, oil, or spirits of turpentine, poured on their hillocks, disperses them; and if widemouth bottles, half filled with water or syrup, be hung among the branches of the tree when the fruit is attaining maturity, ant, wasps, flies, and beetles of all kinds that prey greedily on sweets, will be attracted into them.

Mr. Downing, who recommends this as a "general extirpator suited to all situations," says that an acquaintance caught in this way, in one season more than three bushels of various kinds, and preserved his garden almost entirely against them.

A gentleman in Detroit, who was very careful of his garden, informed me that he had pursued this method of trapping insects with results that perfectly astonished him. He had to empty the bottles every day to make room for more. A very good way of trapping and killing ants is, to besmear the inside of flower pots with molasses, and turn them on their mouths near the hillock; the insects, will soon assemble inside on the molasses, when they are easily destroyed by a handful of burning straw.

Weeds.

No farmer can afford to produce weeds. They grow, to be sure, without cultivation; they grow up on all land, and especially rich land, but though they cost no toil, a farmer cannot afford to raise them. The same elements that feed them, would, with proper cultivation, nourish a crop, and no farmer can afford to expend on weeds the natural wealth which was bestowed by Providence to fill his granaries. I am accustomed, my friends, to estimate the Christianity of the localities through which I pass, by the absence of weeds on and about the farms. When I see a farm covered by a gigantic growth of weeds, I take it for granted that the owner is a heathen, a heretic, or an infidel—a Christian he cannot be, or he would not allow the heritage which God gave him to dress and keep, to be deformed and profaned. And if you will allow me to make an application of the doctrine I preach, I must be permitted to say that there is a great field for missionary effort on the farms between here and Buffalo. Nature has been bountiful to you, but there is great need of better cultivation. To prevent the growth of weeds is equivalent to enriching your land with manure, for to retain in it the elements of which crops are formed, is as profitable as to bring them there. It is better that weeds should not grow at all; but when they exist, and you undertake to destroy them, it is economy to gather them up and carry them to your barnyards, and convert them into manure. You will in this manner restore to your farms the fertility of which the weeds had drained it.

Good Butter.

Butter produced from feeding on corn-fodder, cut when green, is harder, yellower, and worth more by the pound, than when the cows are fed on hay. Corn-fodder, if cut when green, and well cured, is the best feed for milch cows except carrots.

The Cruelties of Slavery.

The following authentic sketches of slave-holding barbarity are taken from the new and extremely interesting work just published by John P. Jewett & Co., entitled, 'Inside View of Slavery; or, a Tour among the Planters. By. C. G. Parsons, M. D.'

B. S., of F. H., in South Carolina, owned a giant slave whose name was Dread. This slave was represented to me by one of the neighbors as a man of superior strength, both of body and mind, being nearly seven feet in height. There were forty slaves at work on the plantation of B. S., before Dread was added to the number; and this name was given him by the new master, on account of his uncommon physical strength.

The next year, Dread was made overseer of the gang, and the management of the plantation was wholly left to his care. The farm was well conducted under his supervision, and every thing went on smoothly and prosperously for several years. The task of every hand was always well and seasonably performed, without wipping. If a feeble woman was sick, or unable to accomplish her task alone, her husband or brother was allowed to assist her. Or if a weak, feeble man could not keep up with the gang his friends were permitted to help him. This is a privilege not customarily granted to slaves.

The fields of B. S. were now so much more productive than those of others around him, that the neighboring planters frequently sought advice of his colored overseer, in relation to the management of their farms: thus deferring to his opinion, and admitting that he possessed more practical knowledge of agricultural matters than either themselves or their white overseers.

A gentleman, well acquainted with Dread, told me that he regarded him not only as much the stoutest, but the most intellectual man he ever saw.

'Dread had the largest head,' he remarked, 'I have ever seen,—and I have seen Daniel Webster; and his natural abilities were not inferior to those of that statesman.'

Placed in a condition less humble than most slaves, he had never appeared so menial and timid. He felt and acted more like a free man. He did not always take off his cap, and put it under his arm whenever he met a white man in the street, or entered his dwelling.

It was natural that the white overseers on the surrounding plantations should be jealous of his success. And soon it began to be whispered around the neighborhood, that if Dread was so disposed, he might become a leader in an insurrection.

The slaveholders held a conference, and decided that it was necessary for B. S. to make an experiment that would test the manhood of the giant slave, and ascertain if he could be made as submissive as all slaves should be made, to insure the safety of the masters. Among the plans that were suggested to B. S., one was to obtain another overseer, and put Dread to work under him in the gang; and if he expressed the least objection to the change, to whip him severely, and 'break him in.'

A large, tall, stout Yankee was secured for a driver, and Dread was ordered to take his hoe, and perform his task with the other hands. Without expressing the least surprise or regret at the loss of his place, or even presuming to inquire why he was to be no longer overseer, he went to work with as much apparent cheerfulness as usual.

This was so unexpected that the masters were greatly perplexed. They could really find no fault in the slave on which to predicate a charge, and inflict a punishment. His noble, fearless bearing, and stately step, were unmistakeable signs that he felt altogether too manly and independent for a humble slave; but how to develop his feelings and prove the fact, was the difficult question. There was nothing in his character or conduct that deserved the slightest reproof, much less a punishment sufficiently severe to crush his manhood and break his invincible spirit. Still, all agree that something must be done.

Finally, they concluded to prefer false charges against him, and punish him if he complained of suffering wrongfully. The master treated him with unusual severity. One, among numerous complaints brought against him, was, that he did not hoe his corn so well as the other hands. To remove this, Dread performed a double task,—hoeing two roes to each of the others one. Tom, who hoed next to Dread, told me that Dread removed every weed, hoed it as neat as a garden, determined to remove every cause for complaint; for he saw that a terrible storm was raising upon him.

Dread and Tom occupied the same hut after the new overseer had come; and they had always been mutual friends.

'Master S.' said Tom, who related the story to me, 'came into our hut one evening, soon after we had finished work, looking so pale that he frightened me: and he said, 'Dread! I say you don't hoe your corn so well as the other hands.'

'How do you know that, master?' replied the intrepid slave, rising up respectfully from his low stool, and looking the master calmly in the eyes.

'Now I know,' said Tom, 'that master S. had not been in the field that day. Nor had he seen the overseer, as his quarters were beyond our hut, and further from the house. Besides, had he consulted the overseer, he would have been informed that, instead of not doing his work 'as well,' Dread had done his work better, and twice as much, as either of the hands. But the moment he questioned his master's knowledge, he had exceeded the prerogative of a slave, and this threw his master into a violent fit of anger.

Ah! you have got above yourself, boy,' he vociferated, raging and foaming with passion 'I must have you taken down a notch! You shall be flogged, you impudent, black rascal!'

'I shall not receive a flogging, sir!' replied the indignant slave, firmly and fearlessly.'

'Mr. S. then ran out to the overseer, and told him to call out all the hands.

'Now take him and tie him,' said Mr. S. when the whole gang had assembled in front of Dread's hut, and he was standing in the door. 'This,' said Tom, 'they attempted to do, in a scuffle which lasted nearly an hour; but they were not able for a moment to confine one of his limbs; for with his hands and feet he flung them on the ground as fast as they came near him. He evidently avoided injuring the slaves more than was absolutely necessary, in defending himself; for he knew they all loved him.'

Soon after the fruitless effort to subdue Dread, the master and overseer of another plantation were employed to come and help bind him, and whip him. In the mean time, Dread furnished himself with a long butcher knife, with which he felt secure. When he saw them coming into the field to take him, he dropped his hoe, drew the rude weapon from his side, advanced a few steps towards them, and brandished the knife, as he stood in an attitude of conscious innocence, moral courage, physical strength, and bold defiance of his foes!

'No man,' said Tom, 'dared lay a finger on him!'

Now a crisis had come. A slave had successfully resisted his master. This must not be tolerated. Such an insurrectionary spirit must be crushed—cost what it may. The deadly purpose was formed in the heart of the master.

'The gun was loaded,' said Tom, 'and I was ordered to take the ammunition, and accompany my master.'

'What are you going to do now?, said Mrs. S. to her husband, as he was passing out of the house.

'I am going out on a squirrel hunt,' replied Mr. S., with apparent composure.

'Had mistress known his intention to kill Dread,' said Tom, 'I think she would have dissuaded him from his bloody purpose,—for she was a Christian woman. But we started off before she had time to say more. Passing around behind the house, we came in sight of the slaves at work in a plum orchard in the valley behind the hill. Master raised his gun—held it steady to his eye, until the victim was selected from the other hands,—and then he fired!'

A heavy charge of buck shot was lodged in the thigh of the great-hearted, unconquerable Dread. The large artery was divided. The blood poured from the wound. Dread ran out a few rods to the hill side, crying to Heaven for vengeance on his murderer, and uttering, in deep, thunder tones, that seemed to make the earth tremble beneath him,

'I'm killed! I'm killed!! I'm killed!!!'

His devoted wife, who, a moment before, stood laboring faithfully at his side, was the first to reach him, crying in a wild, frantic voice—

'Dread is dead! DREAD IS DEAD!! DREAD IS DEAD!!!'

'Hold your tongue!' commanded the murderer.

'Still she screamed,' said Tom, 'louder than I ever before heard from woman—'Dread is dead!—Dread his dead!'

'The master ran up to the fence, and pulled off a rail, and struck that woman with it on the head, repeating—with a horid oath—

'Hold you tongue, I say!'

This is the 'moderate correction' which the laws of the slave States allow! So does slavery harden the heart, until the man is made—not a brute, but—a fiend! So has many a moral hero in the South fallen a victim to its cruel, insatiable spirit!

The body of Dread was carried to its rest, by his mourning companions. The darkness of night could not cover their sorrow. His heart-stricken wife, broken down with grief which no tongue can describe, was sold a few days afterwards to a 'soul-driver' from Kentucky!

The following story was related to me by Mr. D. the owner of Nelly, of whom I have given some account in the preceding chapter.

Mr. D. had a neighbor,—a member of the same church,—by the name of M. He was a wealthy, though an ignorant man, owning many slaves; and besides a plantation, with cattle, and mules, and sheep, he owned mills in that neighborhood. Among his slaves there was a house servant by the name of Nancy. One evening her master told her to go up to Mr. D.'s on some errand. It was a bright moonlight evening, but Nancy was afraid to go. Mr. D.'s son, Henry, had been bitten by a rattlesnake, though the wound was not fatal. He had not fully recovered when I was there. These snakes are supposed to be out in the moonlight evenings, and as they cannot be seen so distinctly as in the day time, they are the more dreaded. Under these circumstances, Nancy's fears were not strange. She therefore told her master that she was afraid to go. But he was enraged at her unwillingness to obey, and he commanded her to start at once. She still refused to go, saying, that the snakes would kill her, and that she would rather be whipped to death than go.

Mr. M. then commenced whipping her, and he applied the lash again and again, until he saw that it was in vain. He was filled with rage, and taking a quart dish, he filled it full of filthy liquid from the barn yard, and put it to her lips: and after compelling her to drink a part of it, he asked her if she would then go.

'No, master; I will die first! I cannot go. I know the snakes will kill me if I go!'

And he whipped her until he made her drink it all. The next morning, the poor girl was dead!

'Did you see the body after her death, Mr D.?' I asked him.

'Yes, I went down to see her, and I never saw such a sight!'

'Was Nancy a Christian, Mr. D.?'

'She was a right good girl,' he replied, with a deep sigh; and he added, 'She was a member of our Church!'

'Did your church discipline your brother M. for killing her?'

'Discipline! What do you mean by that?' inquired Mr. D., not knowing the meaning of the word.

'Did you call him to account?'

'Oh no! How could we? He had not violated the law.'

I became acquainted with a young lady from Maine, who had been teaching school in the South a few years. She belongs to a family of the highest respectability in the city of ——, and at the time of her first going South, none of the family had any sympathy with the anti-slavery movement. The following incident was related to me by her, all the facts being within her own personal knowledge.

Mrs. C.,—where the teacher was boarding,—owned a mulatto girl named 'Chloe,' who was expecting soon to be married to a slave boy named 'Jok,' who lived about five miles distant. I ought, perhaps, to have mentioned before this, that slaves, no matter how old, are always boys and girls. The never become men or women.

Jok went to his master on Saturday night, to obtain a pass to visit Chole. His master was intoxicated, and therefore he could not write a pass. No other person in the neighborhood could write; and Jok's mistress told him it would not be safe for him to go without a pass, as it was contrary to law. Jok waited until morning. Chloe sat up all night watching for him with deep anxiety, lest some evil had befallen him, fearing that he had been whipped, or sold away. Slaves are very faithful in fulfilling promises to visit friends, in order to remove such fears.

In the morning, Jok's mistress told him that his master was still sick, and not able to write; but that he had been up to Mrs. C.'s so many times she would run the risk to let him go without a pass.

'You tell Mrs. C.,' said she, 'that your master is sick, and that I sent you up there without a pass; and she will excuse it.'

When Jok came up to the gate, the overseer went out, as his custom was, and demanded his pass. The slave informed him that his master was so sick he could not write one, that he waited all night for it, and his mistress told him to come without one.

'Go home, you scoundrel!' said the overseer, 'and get your pass!'

Jok started back towards his home. Chloe, who had overheard the conversation, ran into the room of her mistress, and informed her that the overseer had driven Jok home after his pass, and she supposed, as it was early in the morning, that he came away before breakfast. Mrs. C. stepped to the back door, and called Jim,—a young slave boy belonging to her,—and told him to run and overtake Jok, and tell him to come back and see her before he went home to get his pass; not intending to countermand the order of the overseer. Jim ran to bring back Jok. In the meantime, the overseer went out to the stable. Just as the boys returned to the gate, he came in from the stable, and demanded of Jok again 'why he was there without a pass?'

'Mrs. C. sent for me to come back, answered Jok.

'I don't care if she did,' said the overseer; you shan't go in.'

'I tell you I must,' urged Jok.

'Not a step!' forbade the overseer.

Now what should the poor boy do? Two slaveholders, equal in authority commanding him to go in opposite directions. He thought he would press his way through the gate, by the overseer, and run to the door and ascertain what Mrs. C. wanted, and then go home for his pass. In attempting to do this, the overseer clinched him; but Jok proved to be the stronger man, and threw him down. The overseer tried to choke him and strike him in the face. Mrs. C. ran out, and taking hold of Jok's arm, she exclaimed,

'Why, Jok, you don't know what you are doing! I am afraid they will kill you! Now you give right up, Jok, and take a little whipping, and then go for your pass!'

Jok arose instantly, at the request of Mrs. C. As soon as the overseer was able to do so, he sprang up, rushed into the house, and seized a gun which he had loaded with shot the night previous. My informant, who was present, screamed out, 'He is going to shoot Jok!' Mrs. C. caught hold of the gun as he was leaving the house, exclaiming,

'You shan't kill Jok!'

'Yes I will shoot the nigger!'

'Remember my command, sir! Don't you kill that slave! You may whip him.'

'May I whip him, madam, as much as I please?'

'You may whip him severely, but spare his life,' replied Mrs. C., sternly.

'Do you give up, Jok?' said the overseer.

'Yes, master,' was the submissive reply.

His coarse frock, which was all his clothing, was taken off; his thumbs tied together with a line; and the overseer, with a heavy green hide in his hand, led him out to the gin-house to flog him. Chloe went out around the stable, and came up behind the gin-house, where she could look in through the spaces between the logs, and see the punishment inflicted. The overseer was angry with the slave, and he whipped him with terrible severity, until, from suffering and loss of blood, he fainted and fell. Chloe ran to the house, and screamed,

'Mistress! I wish you would go out, for I believe the overseer has killed Jok!'

Mrs. C. hastened out, and finding him cut up shockingly, she told the overseer to desist. She called some other slaves to convey Jok into the house, and then sent for a physician.

When the physician came, he said the slave could not live. He remained with him several hours, during which time he was constantly spitting blood, and uttering groans, as if in the agonies of death. Towards evening, however his sufferings abated, and he finally recovered.

That mistress, and the overseer, and that slave boy and girl, were all members of the same church. And the overseer was superintendent of the Sabbath School connected with that church.

'He came into the house,' said the lady who related the facts to me, 'after whipping Jok, and washed his hands with as much composure as though nothing had occurred, and went off to church to take charge of the Sabbath School that Sabbath morning.'

'Did the church discipline him for that act?' I inquired.

'This question was asked that mistress,' said the teacher to me, 'and she replied that the church could not do anything with the overseer, as he had not violated the law.'

'She was also asked, how she could commune with that overseer?

'How can I refuse to do it,' she replied, 'unless the church censure him? And that I know they will not do!'

[Referring to the burning alive of a slave, accused of murder, in Alabama, Dr. Parsons says:]

Not long before I visited Georgia, there was a tragedy very much like this in that State, though the details were more shocking. I visited the place where it occurred, and heard it repeated by different persons,—though the story was related to me in all its particulars, as I give it here, by Mrs. A. the wife of a slaveholder, who was compelled by her husband to witness the scene! She was an intelligent, Christian lady,—a native of Augusta, in that State. Like very many Southern women, she was opposed to slavery, and sympathized with the slaves in their sufferings,—and for this reason her harsh, unfeeling husband required her to go with him to see the terrible deed.

A punishment had been inflicted upon this slave by his mistress, which I will not name, or describe. In revenge for it he seized a hatchet, and struck her twice upon the head, inflicting wounds that he supposed would cause instant death—though she afterwards recovered. If there were any possible justification of the law of retaliation—if revenge ever could be right—he would have been justified in taking the life of his mistress. Had he not been a slave, public sentiment would have pronounced him guiltless. So he felt. Instead of trying to escape, he ran immediately to the court-house—where the court was then in session—told the officers what he had done, and expressed his willingness to suffer the penalty of the law. That, like those who take life without any excuse, he would, in due course of law, suffer upon the gallows, was what he anticipated. He wished not to avoid the doom. He desired not to live.

But the slaveholders in that region decided that he should suffer a different fate. They determined that he should be burned alive! And they offered him up—a sacrifice—upon the bloody altar of slavery!

They raised money, by subscription, to pay his mistress for her loss. Several persons admitted to me that they contributed for that purpose. The slave was given up to them, and for five days he received fifty lashes each day, upon his naked back, with the heavy 'cotton planters whip.' So was his Heavenly Master scourged before his cruel death!

The appointed day,—which some said was Saturday, others Monday, but which my informant said was the Sabbath,—at length arrived, and the multitude assembled; there is a sparse population in that and the adjoining counties, not over five thousand within a space of thirty miles square:—and yet the number present was variously estimated at from ten to fifteen thousand. All the slaves in all that region were compelled to attend. The slave who was to be executed was the husband of a young wife, and the father of two little daughters, who were also forced to be present! The victim was led out from the place of his confinement to an oak tree, near the court house, where he was surrounded by a vast crowd of beholders, clamoring for the consuming fire! The single garment he had on was taken off, a cord was fastened to the hands, and thus naked, he was drawn up several feet from the earth, and hung suspended upon a large limb.

A slow fire, made of hard pine shavings, was then kindled beneath him. At first the smoke rose and enveloped him, and then the clear, bright flames quickly ascended, coiling about the limbs, encircling the body, scorching the nerves, crisping the fibres, charring the flesh,—and, in mortal anguish, he was, (to use the lady's own language,) 'sweating, as it were, great drops of blood!' But, before life was entirely extinguished, when he was in the last convulsive agonies of death, the executioners applied their knives, which they had prepared, fastened upon poles, cutting open the thorax and abdomen! Then one of the fiends thrust in a hook, prepared in like manner, and dragged out the heart! Another tore out the liver! A third wrenched out the lungs! And with these vital organs, elevated above their heads on the poles, they ran through the crowd, screaming, 'So shall it be done to the slave that murders his mistress!'

Then the heart was thrown upon the ground—and the crowd rushed over it, forward and backward, stamping upon it, crushing out the life-blood, treading it in the dust. Then, in like manner, the lungs, and the liver were disposed of, amid the deafening shouts of the savage throng. 'Such a fiendish, devilish yell,' said my informant, 'was never heard this side of Satan's kingdom!'

I know that this story is too shocking almost, for belief. And yet, after careful inquiry, on the very ground where it transpired, I was fully satisfied of its truth. Without any coloring of my own, 'I tell it as it was told to me' by one who was an unwilling witness of it all. How terrible the lesson it teaches of the influence of slavery upon those who are connected with it!

Emancipation of Slaves.

Sixteen negroes arrived in this city, by the Petersburg cars, yesterday evening, on their way to Ohio. They have been emancipated by their owner, Mr. Arthur Allen, of North Carolina, and intend taking up their residences in the "Buckeye State."—South Side (Va.) Democrat, Sept, 28.

☞ A negro committed suicide at Memphis last week, by shooting himself because his master had sold him to go to Arkansas. He ran away into that State a few weeks before.

☞ At Alexandria, La., a slave boy, ten years of age, was hung, having been convicted of the murder of his master. The day before the execution, some persons called to see him, and found him playing marbles. He was asked why he did'nt pray, as he was to be hung on the morrow. He said 'that was nothing, he had been hung many a time.' From the accounts of the execution in the New Orleans papers, it was that the boy had no idea of the terrible death he was about to suffer. The rope was at length put around his neck, and the child was executed. The whole thing was monstrous.

☞ On the day that the Republican Convention met in Syracuse, nine fugitive slaves, five men, two women and two girls—as fine a lot as ever ran from "the land of the Free" to the Queen's dominions—were forwarded from that city to Canada. Four came from Norfolk, frightened away by the fever, and three or four from Washington.
